'JUSTICE DENIED' IN LEGAL SYSTEM

Inspectors expose failings of Crown prosecutors

By PHIL REILLY

THE Crown Prosecution Service has been slammed after a report revealed serious shortcomings in the delivery of justice in Kent.

Gwyn Prosser MP, a Labour member of the influential home affairs select committee, said he feared justice had become a "postcode lottery", with Kent faring worse than many other parts of the country.

The Government report found decisions and actions are not always properly recorded, cases take longer than average to get through the courts and there is a higher than average rate of "ineffective trials" that do not take place on the fixed date.

It also found that lawyers do not always "address all appropriate issues" when making charging decisions; and there are instances of decisions being made when the duty prosecutor has not seen all the key evidence.

The HM CPS Inspectorate rates performance as either 'poor, fair, good or excellent'. Kent's overall rating was fair, the same as the last assessment in 2005.

Mr Prosser told Kent on Sunday the service's senior managers "need to take a firm grip".

The MP for Dover and Deal said: "There was no overall improvement and, indeed, in four out of the 14 areas we've declined. I think that's a sad reflection on leadership.

"If they can't get basic administration right, how can we have confidence they'll get their important decisions right?"

The report highlights "weaknesses in case progression", which means cases take longer to go through the court system than elsewhere.

Mr Prosser said he was reminded of the saying "justice delayed is justice denied".

He added: "That's what we're seeing in lots of cases here in Kent. The worry is that of the 42 different constabulary areas in the country we are way down in the pecking order."

In the two areas that the Kent CPS had previously received excellent ratings, for handling sensitive cases and hate crimes and securing community confidence, they received good ratings this time around.

Only one of the 14 areas saw an improvement – custody time limits – although this was not enough to increase its fair rating.

The report describes the performance in dealing with persistent young offenders as poor in 2006-07, although it acknowledges this has improved significantly in recent months.

The report acknowledges the service has been through "a period of uncertainty" with changes in the senior management team.

It also said decision making in the courts was generally good, despite not always being properly recorded.

John Fassenfelt, 60, a magistrate from Sittingbourne and former chairman of the youth courts committee at the Magistrates' Association, said it was the ineffective trials that frustrated justices the most.

He said: "On one occasion I was in Maidstone for a two-day trial. The CPS appointed a freelance solicitor and when he came in front of me on the first day the first thing he did was apologise and say he had to go to another trial the next day. The Crown knew about this other case.

"I couldn't continue with him being the solicitor for my trial – it was plainly ridiculous. We had to wait half a day for a new solicitor and we had lost half a day of a two-day trial. This is a typical example and is extremely frustrating."

Kent on Sunday approached the CPS to request an interview with the Chief Crown Prosecutor for Kent, Roger Coe-Salazar OBE, who was appointed in August 2007.

A CPS spokeswoman said this could only happen if the newspaper provided a list of questions beforehand.

KoS refused and repeated its request to speak with Mr Coe-Salazar about the findings of the report.

The spokeswoman later told us that he had gone on leave and was unavailable.

In an earlier statement, he said the CPS in Kent had gone through "a major structural relocation" in recent months.

His statement said: "I have worked closely with my management team to firmly and closely position leadership as the foundation from which to deliver not only the wholesale structural and business change programme, but to focus everyone on our public service responsibility.

"One of the key strands to this has been the empowering of local CPS managers, while

Deaf patients left to suffer in silence

By LORNA BUKY-WEBSTER
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

PEOPLE in parts of Kent have the longest wait in the country for hearing-aid assessments.

Figures published in Parliament show that waiting times in east Kent average nearly a year.

The west of the county fared little better, with people normally left waiting for about 21 weeks.

The Royal National Institute of Deaf People (RNID) told Kent on Sunday the waiting times were unacceptable.

A spokeswoman said: "The people of Kent who are waiting for NHS hearing aids are suffering in silence for far too long.

"During this time, people often battle depression and isolation and find it hard to get by in work and social situations.

"RNID is calling on the Government to take hearing loss seriously and put pressure on local health bosses to meet 18-week targets for fittings."

In an effort to bring down waiting times, health managers have poured nearly £1 million into east Kent alone this financial year.

Roger Gale, Tory MP for North Thanet, said: "Elderly people don't like to wait and don't have time to wait for better hearing and it makes an enormous difference to lives and households."

He added: "High-tech and digital gearing aids don't suit everyone – there are particular types of deafness for which digital technology is just not suitable.

"Interpreting audiology tests is also difficult and there are not enough qualified audiologists.

"There is also the problem of the supply of appliances and the costs; although the costs have come down they are still expensive."

Hard work

Eastern and Coastal Kent Primary Care Trust said the long waiting times were due to an above-average elderly population, with thousands of extra cases compared to other areas.

West Kent Primary Care Trust claimed it had reduced waiting times in the last two years, but was still coping with a backlog of patients.

Bob Deans, West Kent PCT's director of commissioning, said the trust had invested in audiology services and brought in a private provider, Clinicenta, to help speed up treatment provided by Maidstone Hospital and the Kent and Sussex Hospital.

"Thanks to this initiative and the continuing hard work by the PCT and the audiology teams, waiting times are dropping month by month," he said.

"The most up-to-date figures show that by the end of April, people's hearing will be assessed within six weeks across west Kent."

Both PCTs have employed private sector companies to take the most urgent cases.

Hearbase Ltd, the private company working in east Kent, claims it has reduced waiting times from two years to less than four months in some cases.

However, East Kent PCT admits there is still some way to go and is working to reach a government target of 18 weeks by the end of this month.

A spokesman said: "The average waiting time for all patients is less than 39 weeks, but for a large number of patients they are seen and treated within a few weeks or sooner if they are clinically assessed as being urgent."

CPS 'committed to enhancing service' ensuring they have commensurate accountability and responsibility.

"The management team is unequivocally committed to enhancing our service to the public and has already made sweeping changes to realise that ambition."

He added that a "substantial turnaround" has been achieved with persistent young offenders in recent months.

Kent Police issued a statement defending the CPS. The statement said that since Mr Coe-Salazar's appointment many issues raised in the report had already been addressed.

CHIEF: Roger Coe-Salazar

It said: "We support those changes and will assist the CPS where we can in order to ensure Kent has an efficient and effective criminal justice system.

"Kent Police is particularly supportive of the changes Mr Coe-Salazar has made to the local management and we are keen for the people of Kent to see that the criminal justice system is working for them on a local level as well as the much larger investigations Kent Police has to deal with."

In 2006-07, Kent CPS employed around 150 full-time members of staff and had an annual budget of nearly £7.7 million. This was 6.7 per cent more staff than in 2004-05 and a 14.4 per cent bigger budget.

Fast trains give economic boost

HIGH-speed domestic trains between Kent and London will give the Garden of England a huge financial boost, according to a study released this week.

Engineering group Atkins found the overall benefit of opening up the high-speed railway to domestic services could reach £63 billion nationally.

Further economic gains are expected to come from tourism and foreign investment.

Areas of Kent, which previously took a long time to travel to and from London, will receive more visitors to tourist attractions and be considered more viable for investment from the Continent, according to Locate in Kent, an inward investment agency.

Domestic services to be brought in at the end of 2009 will include stops at: Ashford, Folkestone, Dover, Canterbury, Ramsgate, Margate, Sittingbourne and Gravesend.

Trains from Ashford to London will take as little as 37 minutes.

Paul Wookey, chief executive of Locate in Kent, said: "The opening of Ebbsfleet International in January was the first step in truly maximising the connectivity potential of Kent to both Europe and the UK."

Brit disc solution to Operation Stack chaos hits the skids

By PHIL REILLY
phil.reilly@kosmedia.co.uk

The Government has poured cold water on plans to charge lorries to enter Kent from France – days after the county council said a transport minister was supportive of the proposal.

County council leader Paul Carter this week announced his preferred site for a lorry park he hopes will end the misery for motorists caused by the partial closure of the coastbound M20.

The lorry park, just off the M20 near Ashford, would cost up to £40 million, which Cllr Carter said could be paid for by a 'Brit disc' scheme.

The county council said the plan would involve charging heavy goods vehicles as they enter the UK at Dover and the Channel Tunnel, with British drivers being entitled to claim the money back.

Cllr Carter told Kent on Sunday "[I've] always said the Brit disc system, charging £35-40 a day for their stay in this country, would produce £50m a year.

"We had a meeting with [transport minister] Tom Harris and he's gone away to think about it. I wouldn't be surprised to see it in the near future. I think they've taken it very seriously."

Stephen Ladyman, the Labour MP for Thanet South and a former transport minister, has proposed a similar 'vignette' scheme, in which a fee would be levied on all lorries arriving in the UK but excise duty for British lorries would be reduced to offset it.

He added: "Even then, you couldn't designate the money for a lorry park in Kent, it would have to go into the Exchequer."

Dr Ladyman said that any lorry park scheme would have to be funded equally by KCC and the Government.

A spokesman for the Department for Transport confirmed it has been carrying out a feasibility study on 'vignettes' and said the results would be published soon.

But he added: "We remain concerned about whether the scheme is financially viable or not."

The DfT spokesman said the department also had legal concerns about charging foreign lorries to enter the county.

He said, however, that the DfT would look at the lorry park proposals "very carefully".

Should the lorry park go ahead, it would be able to hold up to 3,000 lorries.

Cllr Carter claimed this would have been enough to prevent Operation Stack from being implemented this month.

The lorry park plan has received the backing of Kent Police, which spent around £180,000 implementing Stack during the strike by SeaFrance officers, and the Tunbridge Wells-based Freight Transport Association.

The strike came to an end on Friday, after the French company's managers gave in to some of the officers' demands.

Objections to the lorry park have also been raised by the Campaign to Protect Rural England and the local parish council.

Hilary Newport, head of the CPRE in Kent, said a park would not solve the wider problem of increasing numbers of lorries on the county's roads.

Parish councillor Peter Wood, who represents residents in the villages that would be most affected by the park, said that not all the alternatives had been considered.

He said: "Adequate consideration has not been given to siting hundreds, and indeed thousands, of potentially explosive fuel tanks in such close proximity to a facility of strategic national importance – the National Grid's electricity converter station, which converts all electricity imported from France."

Volunteer praise

THE High Sheriff of Kent, Nigel Wheeler, visited a volunteer centre in Thanet this week.

Mr Wheeler has pledged to spend his year in office raising awareness and supporting volunteers and the valuable contribution they make to communities across the county.

John Seston, chairman of the Thanet Bureau of Volunteers, said: "He believes it is a great thing for society to have volunteers – especially in places where there is a high proportion of elderly people that cannot afford to get out and about to hospitals or to see friends by taxis."

Mr Seston also works as a driver for the bureau, which provides a transport service and also matches volunteers to suitable positions.

"More and more young people are volunteering," he said. "People are realising what a help it is if you do not have a job."

Mr Wheeler took time to chat to the volunteers during his visit on Wednesday, said Mr Seston.

French ferry strike ends at last

THE strike by SeaFrance officers has come to an end after more than two weeks of negotiations.

The action, which began on February 27, forced the firm to cancel ferry services and led to the implementation of Operation Stack.

The strike was over pay and working conditions, with the French firm agreeing improvements in talks on Friday afternoon.

As a result, chief officers, second engineers and second officers will receive an extra 100 euros in their monthly pay packets in return for improvements in productivity.

They will also be allowed to work three days in a row and live more than two hours from Calais.

The agreement meant services between Dover and Calais resumed on Friday afternoon, with a full service available from Saturday.

In a statement, SeaFrance apologised to its customers for the inconvenience caused and said it would resume its services at "the normal level of excellence".

KoS offers charities advice

KENT on Sunday represented Britain's regional newspaper industry at a major conference held to help charities raise more money for good causes.

More than 170 delegates from national and local charities attended the Third Sector conference, held in Earl's Court on Wednesday.

KoS editor Bernard Ginns sat on a panel with the assistant editor of Radio 4's Today programme, the editor of the Guardian's Society section and the social affairs correspondent at Channel 4 news.

The panel took questions from the floor and gave advice on how charities can work with the media in an effective way to get their message across to potential donors.

Other speakers included Max Clifford, the public relations guru, who told delegates how to harness the power of celebrities to promote good causes.

BUDGET 2008 Booze price hike threatens future of local watering holes

Trouble brewing in county's pubs

By TONY PATEY
Business Editor

MORE pub closures are on the slate and brewers are foaming after Chancellor Alistair Darling put nearly 10 per cent on booze duty, due to come into force at midnight tonight.

Before the pubs had even opened their doors on Thursday Mr Darling was admitting in a BBC radio interview that he had put up beer, wine and spirit prices to pay for the increase in child benefit to £20 a week for the first child next year.

Regular readers will know that last week I was saying the Budget should be kept short and simple – the usual "give with one hand and take with the other" with no fireworks – and that's just what Mr Darling did.

It was so neutral he was coasting. As ex-editor of the Financial Times Richard Lambert, now boss of the CBI, said: "He didn't set the Thames alight, but then he didn't have any matches."

But the 9.1 per cent hike in alcohol taxes is going to have a very big impact on the pub trade. Many publicans are already reeling from the smoking ban and the Chancellor didn't give them any hope.

Binge-drinking

Piers MacDonald, owner of the Nelson Brewing Company at Chatham, said: "Lifting duty across the board just raises more cash for the Government and will not prevent drink being sold by supermarkets as a loss-leader."

He said the brewing industry had been getting lectures about tackling binge-drinking and he'd been looking for some long-term vision from the Government.

But the Chancellor didn't even mention the problem – caused mostly by "pre-fuelling" drinking at home before going out.

And an angry Jonathan Neame, chief executive of Faversham-based Shepherd Neame, the nation's oldest brewery, immediately called on Mr Darling to explain the reasoning behind putting up beer by 4p, along with 3p on a litre of cider, 14p on a bottle of wine and 55p on a bottle of spirits.

Mr Neame said: "This 9.1 per cent hike is a cheap political gesture that will do nothing to reduce alcohol-related harm.

"My customers drink responsibly. They don't want to pay more, they don't want to be penalised for the irresponsible behaviour of a minority and they don't want their local pub to close.

"This action will accelerate pub closures. It will also reduce employment in the on-trade, drive consumption to supermarkets, raise less duty revenue and hit the local pub and brewing trades hard. The industry has presented a range of arguments for a freeze on beer duty and made its financial distress abundantly clear."

Many pubs are now turning to serving more food and we've seen some much-loved boozers transform into gastro-pubs. But not every pub is geared up to do that and some could go under after the latest financial blow. The increase of 11p on a packet of 20 cigarettes could also drive more smokers towards cut-price black market sellers.

Well-heeled motorists were also clobbered. From 2010 they could face up to £950 for their new first-year vehicle excise duty.

However, there was some good news for small businesses. Mr Darling launched a £12.5 million fund for female entrepreneurs, and he set a target of 30 per cent for the awarding of public sector contracts to small and medium-sized enterprises – so-called SMEs – by 2013.

He also expanded the small firms loan guarantee scheme by £60 million this year.

But he confirmed the previously announced increase in flat rate capital gains tax for individuals from 10 per cent to 18 per cent from next month, and brought in measures to prevent "income shifting" between spouses trying to pay less tax.

UPSET: Sheps' Jonathan Neame (left) is angry with Chancellor Darling

Tax rise not just for gas-guzzlers

IT'S not just the largest and most polluting cars that are going to be hit by increases in vehicle excise duty next year after Wednesday's Budget.

Under Mr Darling's plans, low-emission cars will be exempted from road tax during the first year – but many other cars will be liable for more tax. For example, all cars over 160g/km, which is the current average for new cars, will pay.

The anomaly has been spotlighted by the Taxpayers' Alliance, which said motorists might have been forgiven for thinking it's just gas-guzzlers that are going to be targeted.

It said research revealed that a majority of the car models in current production will face increased taxes under the new charging structure, even compared with the 2008-09 rates.

According to the Alliance, 88 per cent of cars will pay more under Mr Darling's new charging structure, two per cent will pay the same, and nine per cent will pay less. The higher rate in the first year, the so-called showroom tax, will apply to most cars.

Business 'bible' FT puts Chatham on the spot

CHATHAM was in the financial spotlight after Wednesday's Budget as the global business "bible", the Financial Times, gleaned reactions from residents and bosses.

The FT said the historic town was the centre of the Thames Gateway regeneration and its future was brightening after the gloom of the closure of the naval dockyard in 1984.

Local people were showcased in successive pages giving their views on the Budget, starting with Dickens World entrepreneur Kevin Christie.

He was not happy with the one per cent increase in corporation tax for small businesses from next month, announced in last year's Budget.

At family firm Marina Phipps' bespoke retro clothing business in Maidstone Road, Ms Phipps was also unhappy with the tax hike. However, Jonathan Sadler, Thames Gateway director for the South East England Development Agency, welcomed the money going into making homes more environmentally friendly.

Brewer Piers MacDonald was disappointed with the Chancellor's "lack of vision", and Prof Clare Mackie, Kent University's pro-vice-chancellor for the Medway campus, said the 30 per cent of public sector contracts going to small and medium-sized enterprises was good news for Kent.

Commuter Vivienne Hudson said the Budget was "mind-numbingly boring" and pensioner Roy Ansell was pleased with the winter fuel allowance increase.

Multi-million revamp of leading special school

By JENNA PUDELEK
jenna.pudelek@kosmedia.co.uk

MORE than £7 million has been spent on renovating a special school so it can provide the best education and care for some of the county's most severely disabled children.

Work on the impressive revamp, which includes a hydrotherapy pool and sensory gardens, is due to be completed on Monday, and will benefit all 170 pupils at Ifield School, near Gravesend.

Since Kent County Council re-designated its 11 district special schools to take children with only the most severe, profound and complex needs, concerns have been raised that mainstream schools are left struggling to cope with growing numbers of pupils with special educational needs (SEN).

Spectrum

Part of the work at the Gravesend school, which was funded by KCC's £100 million investment in the county's special schools, is the Ifield Smile Centre.

Smile was set up to provide training, expertise and knowledge in SEN for surrounding mainstream schools in Gravesham.

Lisa Candy, the centre's manager, said: "There are many more children now that would have been in special schools.

"Mainstream schools are having to adapt to meet their needs."

She said that although each school has to have a SEN coordinator – who oversees the education and school life of any children who have physical or learning disabilities – many teachers and teaching assistants need to be trained to meet the extra and different needs of such children.

Parents of children with physical or learning disabilities and autistic spectrum disorders can apply for a SEN statement – a statutory requirement listing the child's individual needs that the school must provide, such as one-to-one teaching.

Mrs Candy said: "There are now a lot more children who are statemented in mainstream schools.

"The centre has a strategic role, looking at the needs of every teacher and all the teaching assistants and find what they need to know and how to work with pupils with a range of different needs."

IMPRESSIVE: The refurbished Ifield School offers facilities for children with special needs

The centre has a lending library with a range of up-to-date resources for other schools and parents to borrow.

It has been in existence since 1999 at an off-site location in Jubilee Crescent, Gravesend, but Mrs Candy said the new centre is needed more since KCC changed the way special education is provided in the county.

"The centre has a higher priority to train people now," she said. "The majority of people we work with are from Gravesham, but we are finding people need information across the county."

The changes are affecting Ifield because all new children coming into the primary school have severe, complex and profound needs. Previously, the school catered for a broader selection of needs.

Mrs Candy said: "The secondary end still has the original pupils with moderate learning difficulties and some high functioning autistic spectrum disorder.

"So it is in a real transition phase. We can see the kind of needs coming through the school, but they have not yet reached the top end of the school.

"The practicalities of this mean a different range of resources are needed. The school is well resourced for meeting certain needs and these have changed quite rapidly."

A huge range of courses are provided at the centre including workshops to help people working with vulnerable pupils and focused on helping the young people build up self-esteem and managing bad or disruptive behaviour.

It also provides advice and training for how to deal with pupils who may struggle with numeracy and literacy.

Understanding autistic spectrum disorders is one of the major courses offered.

Mrs Candy said: "Sometimes people come here just to talk things through. A lot of the time people say they are doing everything they can and they just need reassurance they are on the right lines.

Positive

"It might be they need to revisit the same activity in lots of different ways and we have new resources to allow that. Staff come here to get re-motivated."

She added: "Children we would have had here are in mainstream schools, which is why the courses are crucial to the cluster [of schools in Gravesham] because they are now managing the children."

Ifield is thought of as one of the best special schools in Kent. Its latest Ofsted report in 2004 found it was "an effective school with some very good features. Good teaching promotes learning well and they make good progress.

"The positive ethos means that pupils achieve well in their personal development and the school provides good value for money."

During the summer a house is being built on the extensive grounds that will be used to teach life skills and independent living to the pupils.

It also has a woodland retreat near Cobham so that pupils from Ifield and other local schools, particularly those with emotional difficulties, can escape to a relaxing and calming place.

THE travel & leisure SHOW

Join the fun at our unique travel show

By JENNA PUDELEK
jenna.pudelek@kosmedia.co.uk

THOUSANDS of visitors will be flocking to the first Travel and Leisure Show in Kent today.

Award-winning publisher KOS Media organised the free exhibition which showcases the huge range of tourist opportunities and attractions in and around the South East.

From sites of historical importance such as Hever Castle to 'little gems' such as the shell grotto at Margate – no stone has been left unturned in the show's offerings.

The unique travel opportunities offered within Kent including Eurotunnel, Eurostar, cruises, flights and cross-Channel sailing have been flagged up by the exhibition.

Richard Purvis, marketing director of KOS Media, said: "There's a big story to tell travel and tourism wise in Kent and what no-one has ever done before is put it together and showcase the whole lot."

More than 400 people registered for their free tickets before the action kicked off today at Dover Cruise Terminal Two.

Visitors stand the chance of winning more than 20 top prizes.

A luxury cruise aboard Fred.Olsen's newly renovated Balmoral is up for grabs with a choice of exploring exciting destinations including the Mediterranean, Iberia and Norway.

Family ski lessons at the Folkestone Ski Centre and family tickets to see Walmer Castle and Gardens in Deal are also on offer.

Fran Warrington, head of tourism for Kent County Council, said: "This is an important event for the county's leisure, hospitality and tourism businesses. Kent has a fine reputation as a visitor destination. We are building on that reputation and taking every step to grow our tourism businesses for a sustainable future.

"With its stunning coastline, Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty and internationally renowned castles, gardens, cathedrals and historic houses, Kent has so much to offer visitors of all ages from home and abroad – for a day trip, a short break or a longer holiday."

Around 100 companies and organisations are represented at the exhibition.

Visit Kent has strongly supported the show and promoted its Big Day Out offering hundreds of free and reduced price tickets to some of the county's main attractions and tourist destinations.

The show also has an international feel with French tourist companies and cruise providers among those represented, and Kent International Airport providing details of the new destinations soon to be available on flights from Manston in Thanet.

Face painting, balloon modelling and a magician will keep the children entertained.

The day's presentations kick off at 11am with The Pilgrims' Way – Kent's Oldest Tourist Asset, which will chart the history of the trail from 1420 when 100,000 pilgrims travelled to Canterbury to visit Beckett's shrine to its continuing popularity today.

A presentation about what Whitstable and Herne Bay has to offer tourists will reveal a range of activities from where to eat and drink to discovering traditional seaside magic.

The doors open at 10am and gates close at 4pm, so it's not too late to join the fun. Entry is free and the plentiful parking is also free.

For more information go to www.kentnews.co.uk and follow the Travel and Leisure Show link.

Kent detectives receive MBEs for success in Pitcairn case

PROUD: DCI Vinson gets his award

THE Queen has congratulated two Kent police detectives for their success in prosecuting men guilty of child sex abuse on the remote Pitcairn Island.

Detective Chief Inspector Rob Vinson was given an MBE at Buckingham Palace for his work on the case.

He went to London to meet the Queen with his father John Vinson, wife Kathy and children Katie, 15, Lucy, 12, and Daniel, 10.

DCI Vinson said: "The Queen talked to me about Pitcairn, how remote it is; noting that we were successful in the prosecutions.

"It was clear that she had followed the story closely, which was nice to know.

"I felt immensely proud to have been honoured, not only for myself, but for my family and for Kent Police. Every stage of the investigation had been difficult and required considerable sacrifices."

Former Kent Police detective Peter George also received an MBE for his part in the investigation.

The probe was launched after allegations were made in 1999 to Kent police constable Gail Cox while she was stationed on the tiny British territory in the South Pacific.

Nine men were eventually convicted, six of whom were jailed.

Two Kent nurses recently travelled to the International Hospital in Uganda to train nurses up to NHS standards of cancer care and found many sufferers struggle to receive any help with the disease…

MOSES had a cancerous tumour in his mouth that was growing so fast it would soon block his airway.

But, like hundreds of thousands of other Ugandans, he could not afford treatment for the cancer.

The 12-year-old lost both his parents to Aids last year and is the sole carer of his seven-year-old brother.

He has now received treatment thanks to a unique charity ward at the International Hospital in Kampala, the capital of the east African country.

Wendy Hills, who works as a cancer nurse specialist for East Kent Hospitals Trust, visited the hospital this year to train the Ugandan nurses up to NHS standards in treating the disease.

The cancer unit at the hospital, Hope Ward, opened last June and is run by the Suubi Trust. It treats around 12 to 15 outpatients with chemotherapies a day and has four in-patient beds.

"It is definitely the tip of the iceberg," Mrs Hills said. "The International Hospital is trying to address the balance, but the main government hospital does not have any money or funding."

The World Health Organisation estimates that cancer is one of the leading causes of death in Uganda. In 2005, cancer caused 9.4 per cent of deaths compared to the 13.3 per cent it claims currently.

Mrs Hills and one of the nurses on her team, Jane Orwell, travelled to Africa at the suggestion of Dr Helena Nam, an oncologist who heads up the free of charge cancer care service at the hospital.

Dr Nam used to work as a registrar at the Kent and Canterbury Hospital.

Mrs Hills said Dr Nam and her team were constantly struggling to find businesses or individuals to sponsor patients and fund treatments.

The International Hospital is the only one in the country able to offer free treatments in an effort to bridge the gap of cancer care between the rich and the poor.

Mrs Hills said she saw hordes of very sick and vulnerable people who had travelled thousands of miles queuing outside the government-run hospital in the capital.

"It is like everything you'd expect to see in Uganda," she said. "You just don't get treatment unless you can afford to pay and that was quite shocking to see.

"If you get cancer you have to go around and get everyone you know to contribute to the price of care.

"We are so lucky in the UK. The majority of staff and patients don't have to think in monetary terms."

One man Mrs Hills met waiting outside the hospital had saved up for a year, but only had enough money for one course of chemotherapy.

She said: "We negotiated to find him a sponsor. He had a leg tumour and one course would shrink it, but would pretty much do nothing to make a real difference."

Since her 10-day trip in January Mrs Hills has come up with a number of different ideas to begin to help tackle the growing problem in Uganda.

The task facing the team at Hope Ward is huge and is coupled with a national shortage of doctors.

"We are fundraising to get two nurses to come over here so they can be trained up and then go on to 'cascade' train other nurses in Uganda.

"There is something like one doctor per 250,000 people. Nurse-led care really lends itself to Third World countries because they just do not have the doctors," she said.

The problem is heightened because of the culture of witch doctors in rural areas and a general lack of awareness and information about the disease.

"One lady had breast cancer and she was absolutely convinced that it was a curse from her husband's new wife and that it would not go away until the curse was lifted. It is just such a different world," Mrs Hills said.

Cervical cancer is a big problem in Uganda because unlike in the UK they do not have a national cervical screening programme.

"The biggest shock was seeing so many women in their 20s and 30s with advanced stages of the disease, it was horrendous," she said.

Mrs Mills attended a meeting where health-care professionals were urging health ministers to fund the HPV vaccine across the country in order to save the next generation of Ugandan women from the disease.

The vaccine tackles sexually transmitted strains of genital human papillomavirus, which causes cervical cancer and genital warts.

'If you get cancer you have to go around and get everyone you know to contribute to the price of care'

Mrs Mills said she was hoping NHS cancer patients might sponsor Ugandan patients to receive the same treatment.

She is also launching an unusual appeal urging Kent breast cancer survivors to send in their unwanted breast prostheses.

A breast prosthesis is an artificial breast that means when dressed women look the same as before their mastectomy.

Women in the UK wear them while waiting for reconstruction surgery.

In Uganda there is a huge stigma attached to all cancers, but especially breast cancer, Mrs Hills said.

People understand that it can be hereditary and so if a young woman's mother had breast cancer her daughters are unlikely to be able to find husbands, she said.

Women with breast cancer and their daughters become ostracised by both their families and the whole village.

Mrs Hills said: "The first lady we fitted was a nun and she was so grateful. She had been using a bunch of rags she was so desperate to hide her condition.

"It is about how you feel about yourself and she was so chuffed to get the prosthesis to look normal and not have people stare."

Cancers related to Aids such as Kaposi sarcoma are becoming an increasing problem in Uganda and other African countries, because while there is an increasing availability of anti-retroviral drugs to treat people infected with HIV, there is poor provision of cancer treatments.

Mrs Hills added: "Being able to do something for a handful [of patients] is a start. So is beginning to teach their nurses so they can go back and pass on the treatment – it is a start and that is better than nothing."

Children to play migrants' music

DETAINEES from Dover Immigration Removal Centre have been collaborating with primary school children for a musical piece to be performed by musicians next weekend.

Although the detainees cannot be present at the event, children from St Mary's CofE Primary School will perform their piece with support from musicians, Lucky Moyo and Téa Hodzic.

The adult detainees and children worked on lyrics and music for the piece separately. They recorded excerpts separately, which were later mixed together. The finished CD will be distributed at the concert.

It takes place at the Roundhouse Theatre, Dover Discovery Centre, at 12.30pm on Saturday. Call 01227 459 243 for details.

RIOT OF COLOUR: Beech Court Gardens will be open again on Easter Sunday

Beauty spot riding out the storms

By JENNA PUDELEK

But this Easter Sunday, visitors will get the chance to see the famous display of azaleas and rhododendrons at Beech Court Gardens at Challock, near Ashford – thanks to the hard work and determination of its owner.

Puff Miller-Thomas and her brother, the estate owner Vyvyan Harmsworth, are hoping this will be a better year for the nationally renowned 70-year-old garden.

Last year's announcement that the gardens would have to close was met with great sadness locally.

"One woman burst into tears," Mrs Miller-Thomas said. "People were absolutely mortified. Everyone was so disappointed. We hope perhaps things will take a turn for the better."

The gardens have been open to the public for the last decade.

Mr Harmsworth, whose second cousin is Viscount Rothermere, chairman of the Daily Mail and General Trust family of newspapers, has been hard at work in the gardens, said Mrs Miller-Thomas.

She added: "We decided we'd try for another season to see if we can turn it around.

"It was a lack of business really due to the foul weather – there were three-and-a-half months of no-one really coming.

"There are so many people that love it. It would be a terrible thing to have to close.

"But another year like last year and it's the end of it."

A lot of effort has gone into getting the gardens looking good enough for public view this Easter Sunday and even if they are not ready, the tearoom in the old oast building will be open for cream teas and roast dinners.

Mrs Miller-Thomas said: "My brother has done a lot of pruning and it's looking quite good. The soil is wonderful here."

There are 10 acres of tranquil gardens surrounding the medieval farmhouse at Beech Court, including an ancient oak tree and a large selection of shrubs.

Mr Harmsworth inherited the estate from his godfather, Major Jack Botley, who landscaped the gardens after World War Two.

And since semi-retiring as director of corporate affairs of the Daily Mail and General Trust, he has been able to spend more time in the gardens, Mrs Miller-Thomas added.

For more information call Beech Court on 01233 740 735.

KCC turns down request to name 16 top earners

By JAMIE McGINNES
jamie.mcginnes@kosmedia.co.uk

COUNTY Hall is refusing to divulge the names of 16 civil servants it employs that earn more than £100,000 a year – because it says it would infringe their human rights.

A request for their names by the Taxpayers' Alliance pressure group was turned down by Kent County Council chief executive Peter Gilroy.

Mr Gilroy has said that he was nearly physically assaulted in a restaurant by a member of the public angry about the fact he has the biggest salary of any council official in England.

Cllr Alex King, deputy leader of KCC, said: "The county council has taken further advice from the director of law and governance.

"His advice is that this involves striking the right balance between transparency and accountability on the one hand and individual human rights and data protection on the other, and that the position that we have previously taken to withhold the identity of individual officers is entirely justified in the circumstances and should be maintained."

Among reasons justifying the decision, Cllr King cited the "unwarranted personal and abusive comments and attacks made following last year's publicity".

He added: "We are not prepared to have staff subjected to similar experiences.

"KCC is responsible for setting and justifying salary levels. It is not the individual officers who occupy the posts who should be regarded as accountable.

"It is most unfortunate the debate has been allowed to take the form of personal attacks on individuals who have no part in the setting of their salaries in the way that it has."

In an interview with KOS Media a year ago, Mr Gilroy justified his salary, which is about £230,000.

He had visited Charlton Athletic FC the same week and said his wages were much less than players – before comparing himself to a football manager.

He said: "One of the soccer players said to me, 'Well you don't earn that much – I earn that in a week!'

"The truth of it is, if you look at the chief execs of those authorities that are the best in the country, you'll see a correlation. These jobs are like football managers' jobs. If Kent blew it one year, I would not be around.

"If I blow it in terms of the money goes, I overspend, I go."

You can pass the 11-plus exam and still not get into your local grammar

By PHIL REILLY
phil.reilly@kosmedia.co.uk

SOME children who passed their 11-plus exams are being refused places at their local grammar school and have been offered spots elsewhere, including at secondary modern schools.

Kent County Council confirmed "it is the case" that a number of pupils who passed the entry test had to travel long distances to a grammar or go to secondary modern instead.

The problem applies to the west of county where grammar schools are over-subscribed.

Peter Read, an independent education advisor, said some schools had a policy to take children who scored highest – regardless of where they live.

In Gravesend, he said around two dozen boys and girls are lodging appeals after being turned down at the two grammars, despite passing the 11-plus.

He said: "They have been replaced by higher scorers living out of Gravesham who have priority."

Judd School, Skinners School and, to a lesser extent, Tonbridge Grammar for Girls regularly take in highest scorers from places like West Sussex, Surrey and the London boroughs, which forces children to take up places in Maidstone, said the retired headmaster.

He claimed some children from Sevenoaks were being offered places more than 25 miles away at Borden Grammar School in Sittingbourne.

Freedom

Parallel problems have haunted popular non-selective schools as well, added Mr Read, who claimed the wide variety of admission schemes confused parents.

He predicted the problem of children being allocated distant schools would continue while the increasing number of foundation and voluntary-aided schools "are given freedom within the law to make up their own admission criteria to select children".

Councillor Mark Dance, the cabinet member for education operations at Kent County Council, acknowledged there was a problem annually with children passing the Kent Test and not being offered places at local grammars.

But he said the situation would improve over the next few years.

He told KOS Media: "We are at the peak of young people taking the Kent Test this year. Because of falling rolls it will decline every year, so a problem now is less of a problem next year."

He also appeared to blame the Government's anti-selection education policy, saying "part of the problem is that we can't build new grammar schools".

Kent did not encourage schools to choose higher-scoring students over local ones, said Cllr Dance, who claimed it was a matter for the individual schools.

In the east of the county, however, some schools are undersubscribed.

Any parents who need help or guidance about their child's secondary school place can call government-funded choice advisors on 01622 694 073.

They can also visit Mr Read's website at www.kentadvice.co.uk.

Business friendly accolade

KENT has been named as one of the top 25 European Regions of the Future 2008-09. It came fourth after Scotland, Flanders and Northern Ireland.

The biannual shortlist, compiled by fDi magazine, a global publication focusing on foreign direct investment published by the Financial Times, puts Kent as the top English location.

The county was also credited for coming tenth out of all 250 cities and regions in the 'most business friendly' category.

Paul Wookey, chief executive of Locate in Kent said: "Kent's proposition for overseas businesses speaks for itself – we have assisted companies from the US, Germany, France, The Netherlands, South Africa and Ireland create in excess of 1,000 jobs in the county just this year."

WHEN the young actors of this theatre company take to the stage to perform, they don't all recite the words.

Instead, some use a variety of other techniques, including sign language, body language and gesture.

What makes Inspiration different to other youth theatre groups is that half its members are either deaf or have some degree of learning difficulties, emotional and behavioural problems or physical disabilities.

They have been tackling some of the great works of British literary history, performing Romeo and Juliet last summer and making preparations for this summer's production of A Midsummer Night's Dream.

Audience

In between, the troupe this week staged a one-off performance of Peter Pan. It was chosen, written and performed by the whole group, with the performance taking place on Wednesday evening at the Queens Road Baptist Church Hall in Broadstairs in front of an audience of family and friends.

The inclusive theatre group, which has about 30 members aged eight to 20, is based in the Thanet town and is the brainchild of husband and wife team Zoe, 29, and Peter Hammond, 43.

The couple both work at Westgate College for Deaf People, Zoe as a teacher and Peter as a learning support assistant.

After deciding which play to perform, Zoe has a big job on her hands studying and rewriting the text to suit the actors abilities.

She said that when performing their version of Romeo and Juliet, called Star Crossed Lovers, scenes such as the famous balcony scene had to be carefully tailored to suit the other actors and the audience.

Zoe, who is also a freelance music teacher, explained: "Romeo and Juliet were both played by teenagers who could hear, but Juliet had managed to learn some sign language as well as a couple of the important lines from the scene. She was able to perform both at the same time. Because Romeo had dyslexia he was not happy about signing, so he had an interpreter.

"When the nurse came in she was played by a deaf girl, she signed her lines and the interpreter spoke over them.

"When there are two people on stage, one of them will sign while the other speaks."

She said she was encouraged to start the theatre company after working at the deaf school and said it can have a great effect on the children's self esteem.

Positive

"I'm seeing so many positive effects coming in and it's really good.

"They are all really good friends, the mainstream children help the others and nobody looks at anybody like it's not normal."

Zoe and Peter have a team of volunteers who support the children to make sure that everybody is able to understand what is going on.

Inspiration is now officially affiliated with the Theatre Royal in Margate, which will host its production of A Midsummer Night's Dream in July.

As well as performing, the group also teaches drama, art and gives members the chance to design their own sets.

It currently has vacancies for children from mainstream schools aged 13 and over.

MP's fears over power plant

By PETER BOYES
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A LABOUR MP has asked ministers to explain why the Government removed key conditions relating to the building of a new coal-fired power station.

E.ON, the German utility giant, wants to build the country's first coal-fired station for two decades at Kingsnorth.

It passed a major hurdle in early January when councillors at the local authority in Medway said they had to objection to the plans.

Bob Marshall-Andrews, the Labour MP for Medway, is calling for a public inquiry into the planned station, which environmental campaigners say would emit 4.5 million tons of CO2 per annum and account for more than five per cent of the target carbon reduction by 2020.

Conditions

He cited emails, obtained by Greenpeace and reported by KOS Media, which show that the Department for Business Enterprise and Regulatory Reform agreed to remove conditions relating to the carbon capture technology from draft conditions of the application.

The controversial technology is designed to deliver 'clean coal' but is as yet untested.

According to the emails, E.ON said the technology "has no current reference for viability at any scale" and demanded that it be allowed to build a conventional plant.

Mr Marshall-Andrews requested a meeting with the Minister of State for Energy, Malcolm Wicks, but he says the minister refused.

According to a spokesman for Mr Marshall-Andrews, the minister wrote in a letter to the MP, dated February 29: "It's difficult for ministers taking consent decisions to hold meetings with interested parties."

The MP said: "This is an extraordinary state of affairs which requires clear explanation and I have put down a Parliamentary Question in order to obtain it.

"The fact that senior ministers are refusing to meet with MPs – as a matter of 'propriety' – while senior officers in their department are apparently in close and daily contact with the multinational applicant company, raises obvious matters of the gravest concern.

LETTER: Bob Marshall-Andrews wants a public inquiry into plans for a coal-fired power station at Kingsnorth

"This is particularly the case where the application poses such vital questions as to the Government's environmental credentials."

The station would be a test-bed for the controversial and untested carbon capture and storage technology.

Mr Marshall-Andrews has now asked the Business Secretary, John Hutton, to make a statement explaining, "the apparent withdrawal of conditions relating to carbon capture contained in emails passing between senior department officials and the applicant company".

The MP's statement was released after Mr Hutton pledged Britain's commitment to fossil fuels – saying they were needed to "back-up" nuclear and renewable energy.

Mr Hutton said the decision on what conditions would be attached to the building of Kingsnorth had not yet been decided. He added: "I have not made a decision in regard to Kingsnorth yet and I want to make that quite clear."

Caroline Lucus, the Green MEP for the South East, said the Secretary of State's comments amounted to a "green light" for Kingsnorth, which she said was "ill-conceived, backward looking and environmentally disastrous."

Improving travelling in Kent

Your one-stop guide to information and advice on travelling

Kent County Council

Weather forecasting to protect our roads

We all know that climate change is a major global issue, but did you know that some of the greatest changes in climate in the UK are expected to impact Kent and, in particular, our road network?

Over two thirds of all extreme weather events in the last ten years have had a direct impact on the roads. These extreme weather incidents are expected to increase, and at Kent Highway Services, we know that we need to start planning for these effects now.

That's why we recently met with our Alliance partners and climate change experts from across the county to discuss the impacts of climate change on our road network and start planning ways to deal with it.

We looked at issues including how to deal with cracking or melting roads in hotter, drier summers, how to prevent flooding in wetter, stormier winters and how we can cut down our carbon emissions footprint when carrying out maintenance and construction work.

Image provided by the Environment Agency

We also identified areas of the network that are particularly vulnerable to the effects of climate change and identified solutions to protect those areas.

All of the information that came out of the meeting will help us to develop an effective climate change strategy, so we can continue to deliver the best possible service, whatever the weather.

More information about the work that we do is available on our website at www.kent.gov.uk/highways

Making sure our drains can cope

For the Kent Highway Services Drainage team, climate change is a very real problem and experts predict that we will see an increase in the number of winter heavy rainfall days, changes in season patterns and higher sea levels and storm surges.

This means an increased risk of flooding and that's bad news for our road network – water is the biggest single cause for the deterioration of road surfaces and structures.

An effective approach to flooding is the best form of defence against these effects and our specialist drainage team is always looking for new ways to deal with drainage to reduce the impact in the first place and adapt the way we deliver our service.

To try and reduce the impact in the first place, we look at the way we carry out our work and how we can reduce our own effect on the environment. We've invested in a new fleet of vehicles with more fuel efficient engines, we use recycled water for flushing drainage systems and we carefully plan the routes taken by our vehicles to maximise the number of drains cleansed per mile.

When it comes to adapting the way we work, it's important for us to predict and tackle the biggest risks. We collate historical records to map the areas of road network where flooding is most likely to occur and where the structure of the network is most prone to damage by this flooding. Using this information, we can then target maintenance works for example by rescheduling the frequencies for drain emptying.

We also work on developing new solutions to make sure that our drainage systems can cope with increased levels of rainfall and we check that any developer proposals allow for the future effects and are capable of dealing with climate change.

However, despite the preparation there will still be emergency situations. That's why we're also making sure that we can still respond effectively to emergencies when extreme weather hits.

For more information about our work, visit www.kent.gov.uk/highways

Helping to keep Kent clean

As well as all of the highways work that we do, Kent Highway Services works with various partner organisations and one of those is Clean Kent.

Clean Kent is a multi-agency initiative that is committed to improving Kent's environment. It recognises that fly-tipping, along with litter, rubbish and abandoned vehicles are elements of anti-social behaviour and, in turn, crime. That's why Clean Kent set up a dedicated team to tackle these issues and incidences of fly-tipping in the county have already been reduced by 15% in the four years that it's been running.

Keeping Kent clean means keeping its highways and byways clean too and that's where Kent Highway Services comes in. As well as cutting grass on major roads and clearing weeds on the highways and footpaths, we help by keeping street furniture like road signs clean and free of graffiti or posters. We also share any information that we get, for example about fly-tipping on the highway, with the Clean Kent enforcement team, so they can try to prevent it happening.

Image provided by David Young

We're looking at the possibility of our road crews carrying graffiti kits too, so they can clean graffiti off signs as they see them.

The Clean Kent partnership is made up of the 12 district and borough councils in Kent, Kent Police, Kent Fire and Rescue, the Environment Agency, HM Prison Service, the Kent Probation Area, voluntary organisations and, of course, Kent Highway Services.

You can find out more about the work Clean Kent does at: www.cleankent.co.uk

Health Secretary backs our superbug campaign

KOS MEDIA'S campaign to tackle superbugs through promoting basic hygiene has won the backing of the Secretary of State for Health, Alan Johnson, writes Jenna Pudelek.

Like the award-winning publishers, Mr Johnson believes it is everyone's responsibility to help our hard working and dedicated NHS staff tackle healthcare-associated infections.

Simply washing your hands with liquid soap and water and using the alcogel provided in hospitals across Kent kills off bugs including MRSA and Clostridium difficile.

And remember if you don't think your consultant, doctor, nurse or other healthcare professional has washed his or her hands then challenge them, and if you are unhappy with hygiene standards in any ward, waiting room or GP surgery in the county alert a member of staff.

This is Mr Johnson's letter of support to editor Bernard Ginns…

Dear Mr Ginns,

TACKLING healthcare-associated infections and improving cleanliness in hospitals is a top priority for the Government and NHS and we recognise that this is a key concern for the people of Kent. Patients have a right to clean and safe care wherever and whenever they are treated by the NHS.

Healthcare-associated infections are everyone's responsibility, from the chief executive to the cleaner, to the clinician, to the public and to me. We all have our part to play in helping prevent infections and treating them effectively if they do occur.

We published Clean, Safe Care: Reducing Infections and Saving Lives in January, which sets out the range of actions that are being taken across England to ensure that we continue to make progress in tackling infections and improving cleanliness.

The rates of MRSA bloodstream infections have reduced significantly and we are currently on track to hit the challenging target of halving the number of cases by April 2008 from 2004 levels. Maidstone and Tunbridge Wells NHS Trust is playing its part in this. I know that, since the trust prioritised infection prevention and control, it has driven down MRSA rates so that the trust is now the second-best performing acute trust in the region.

We are beginning to see reductions in Clostridium difficile with the latest statistics for the most vulnerable 65 and over age group from the independent Health Protection Agency showing a reduction of 16 per cent against the same period last year.

After the tragic events of 2005, and the damning conclusions of the Healthcare Commission, I wanted to see and hear for myself, first-hand, how things had changed. That is why I visited Maidstone Hospital, in November, to talk to staff, patients and some relatives of those who died. I have also exchanged correspondence with Mr Tony Charlton, one of the many local campaigners who is quite rightly holding everyone to account to ensure that hospital hygiene remains a top priority from the ward to the board and up to Whitehall.

During my visit, I was reassured by the scale of change – but none of us can afford to become complacent.

However, we can only make the strides that are needed if we work together on this. As I have already said, everyone has a role to play and I am, therefore, extremely pleased to see KOS Media and the local NHS working in partnership to raise awareness of the actions that can be taken, such as good hand hygiene, to stop the spread of infections. I wish you every success in the campaign.

Military honour for soldier's iron nerve during firefight in Iraq

Picture: SGT ANTHONY BOOCOCK RLC

BATTLE HONOUR: Lance Corporal Wayne Reed was Mentioned in Dispatches for his heroism

By JAMIE McGINNES
jamie.mcginnes@kosmedia.co.uk

A SOLDIER has been honoured for his "courage and granite nerve" while under fire in Iraq.

Lance Corporal Wayne Reed, from Elvington, near Dover, was shot in the leg and narrowly escaped being killed by a grenade in Basra in 2006.

The 22-year-old, who is from Kent's County Regiment, The 1st Battalion The Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment (1PWRR), was involved in 'search and arrest' raids.

The former pupil at Archers Court, Dover, was among troops tasked with capturing suspected insurgents responsible for attacks against British servicemen in Basra city.

LCpl Reed, who belongs to a reconnaissance platoon, was the first man into a house when he immediately came under "sustained fire" from an automatic weapon.

He kept his cool so he could shoot back at the gunman, who he killed. It was only then that LCpl Reed, who was a private at the time, noticed he had been shot in the leg, so he decided to fall back. As he did so, he narrowly escaped being blown up by a grenade the insurgent had thrown as his last, dying action.

LCpl Reed was given a Mention in Dispatches for his actions. He collected the award during a presentation ceremony at his barracks in Germany.

Captain Ian Pennells, commanding officer of LCpl Reed's platoon, said the award was a "thoroughly deserved accolade, presented to a brave, courageous soldier for heroic actions."

He added that LCpl Reed was "an example to soldiers everywhere."

After the presentation, LCpl Reed described his part in the action. "It was during a house strike to retrieve a person from the house and it just went noisy from the start," he said.

"I got injured during it but we carried on the assault and pulled out."

According to his citation, his contribution to the assault on the building was "instrumental to the success of the mission".

Determination

A Kent Army spokesman said: "LCpl Reed has shown tremendous bravery and determination and exhibited the true professionalism for which the British Army has become renowned.

"He is a credit to the Army and his regiment, the most decorated in the British Army, and his well-deserved Mention in Dispatches will add to PWRR's rich history of battle honours."

The County Regiment of Kent, Sussex, Surrey and Hampshire, 1PWRR has its regimental headquarters in Canterbury, but the battalion is currently stationed in Paderborn, north Germany, with the British Army's 20th Armoured Brigade.

Meanwhile, soldiers from 36 Engineer Regiment, who are based at Invicta Park Barracks in Maidstone, are due to return from Afghanistan in the next week.

The regiment's 320 men have been on a six-month tour of the dangerous Helmand Province. They were involved in the recapture of the Taliban's most strategically important stronghold in the region, Musa Qala.

The December assault by thousands of soldiers was described as the biggest ever undertaken by British troops in Afghanistan.

Councils warned EU treaty is 'not a parish matter'

PARISH councils have been told they are not allowed to hold referendums on national issues such as the EU reform treaty.

The National Association of Local Councils (NALC) has sent out guidance to all parishes telling them that "polls to debate an issue unspecific to a parish is outside their jurisdiction and therefore unlawful".

It follows several local polls held across the country about the EU treaty and referendum question.

A 500-signature petition calling for a referendum was also taken to Downing Street last month by villagers from Lamberhurst, near Tunbridge Wells. A poll held in 10 marginal constituencies by the I Want A Referendum campaign earlier this month also found that 90 per cent of those who responded wanted a referendum.

The NACL guidance letter said: "A number of parish meetings have been convened for discussing 'whether there should be a referendum on Europe'.

"Consequently, meetings have called for a parish poll on this question. The object of a parish poll is to check that the opinion expressed by a parish meeting, which has expressed its opinion by means of a vote on a resolution, is shared by all the electors in a parish."

An understanding of Islam

MUSLIMS in north Kent are aiming to improve understanding of their religion during an event today.

The Gravesend and Dartford Muslim Association is hosting Understanding Islam: Celebrating the life of the Prophet Muhammed, which will feature guest speakers, an exhibition and buffet.

One of the speakers will be Abdul Basit, Pakistan's Deputy High Commissioner to the UK. It takes place today at the Woodville Halls in Gravesend, from 2-6pm. Entry is free and non-Muslims are encouraged to attend. For more information, call 01474 364 899.

HER historical novels have sold millions of copies. One of them, The Other Boleyn Girl, has just been turned into a Hollywood film.

Philippa Gregory's latest book, about Mary Queen of Scots, is due out in autumn and she is planning another set in the time of Henry VII, Henry VIII's father.

But she hasn't always had such a fascination with the past.

"I didn't like history at school," she said. "I was at an all-girls school and the topic at A-level was the wars of the Emperor Justinian, so it was military, tactical history.

"There's nothing there that would interest anybody of any normality."

The film based on her book, The Other Boleyn Girl, stars Natalie Portman as Anne Boleyn, Scarlett Johansson as her sister Mary and Eric Bana as Henry VIII, and hit cinemas just over a week ago.

Dr Gregory decided to write the 2001 novel after becoming intrigued by Mary Boleyn's role in the Tudor love triangle.

The 54-year-old, who has a doctorate in 18th century literature from Edinburgh University, said: "The story came to me when I found out about Mary Boleyn, who was known to historians, but absolutely as a footnote. She wasn't of any great interest to anybody because she was just one of Henry's lovers."

As part of her research for the book, Dr Gregory visited places associated with the historic figures, including the Boleyns' family home, Hever Castle, near Edenbridge. Dr Gregory, who lives in Yorkshire, said it was a "spooky" experience.

"I think of them as if they were real people in the here and now," Dr Gregory added. "That's how I write my novels. So when you then go to places and you know they were there you do have a real sense of their presence even in the present day."

The novelist said she was present during shooting for the new film at Penshurst Place.

"To actually be somewhere and everybody's in Tudor costume and the house looks Tudor and it looks like it's then and there, it's a very haunting experience," she said.

Hever Castle features heavily in Dr Gregory's book, but was not used as a location in the movie because film-makers claimed it lacked atmosphere. However, Dr Gregory said she thought it contained some of the best examples of Tudor rooms in the country.

Evocative

"Hever Castle is practically my home," she said. "I go there often, I love it. I love the gardens and the setting – it's incredibly evocative. For anyone who's interested in the Boleyns and Tudor history it's absolutely a key place.

"It's been wonderfully restored and the best part for me is there are whole chunks of it that haven't been touched. I don't have to look at them with a squint.

"Very often I go to Tudor houses or historic palaces and I have to shield my eyes from post-1550 additions. But at Hever it's possible to be in the courtyard or the great gallery or some of the smaller rooms and it's exactly as they had it."

As well as Penshurst Place, the film was shot at Dover Castle and Knole House, near Sevenoaks.

Dr Gregory was a historical consultant to the film-makers, but they didn't always listen to what she had to say.

"If I disliked something and told them, sometimes they paid attention and sometimes they didn't," she said. "That's their right – it's their movie."

Although the film has been successful at the box office, it has not been well received by critics.

Last week, historian Dr David Starkey told KOS Media that the film was nothing more than an inaccurate "romp" and "absolutely glorious trash".

Dr Gregory agreed, but said that didn't mean it was a bad film – or that her book was inaccurate.

"I think he's right. It is historically inaccurate and he's right to identify that it's glorious. Hollywood doesn't care about history and we'd be insane if we thought it did. Why should it? That's not what people go to the cinema for.

"They read David Starkey for historical accuracy and they read me for historically accurate fiction, but people don't go the cinema because they want to understand Tudor history.

"They go because they want a really good evening's entertainment and I think this film provides that."

Dr Gregory enjoyed the film. "I like it very much," she said. "It's quite different from the book and that's right really because the book's a very substantial novel based on the history and the film has to do its job in about an hour and a half.

"It takes out of the book the key story, which is the story about the two girls – Mary and Anne Boleyn – and their love affair with the king, and focuses on them."

Scrap bridge tax for all

A KENT MP and a parliamentary candidate have called for a week without tolls on the Dartford Crossing.

Adam Holloway, Conservative MP for Gravesham, and Gareth Johnson, Tory candidate for Dartford, have asked the Government to introduce a weeklong trial to assess the impact of removing tolls.

Mr Holloway and Mr Johnson argue that removing the tolls would lead to freer flowing traffic, less pollution and faster journey times.

Mr Johnson said: "I personally think the tax should be axed for everyone."

Save Wye again

By PHIL REILLY
phil.reilly@kosmedia.co.uk

THE author who led the campaign to save the village of Wye from property developers wants to see its renowned university campus restored to its bustling former self.

The last students are due to leave Wye College, run by Imperial College, next year, but thriller writer David Hewson is hoping Government money could see it return to its former glory.

Universities secretary John Denham announced this month a "university challenge" for councils and regeneration agencies to bid for funding for 20 new higher education campuses.

Mr Hewson, who was instrumental in a successful campaign against large-scale housing development in the village in 2006, told KOS Media the college was a ready-made location for such a campus.

He said: "Wye was a university village and the university was a key part of the community, not just for employment.

"It has been a huge loss to the village. It has been steadily run down by Imperial College over years and the effect on the village has been considerable.

"There can't be anywhere else that has a ready-made small university – it is a fantastic opportunity."

The campus already has facilities for student accommodation, lecture theatres, laboratories and agricultural land.

The college was founded in 1432 by John Kemp, the Archbishop of York, who was born in the village. It was granted its licence by Henry VI.

WYE NOT? David Hewson wants the village's campus restored to former glory

Mr Denham said the Government has set aside a £150 million pot for councils and agencies to bid for to fund the universities.

Mr Hewson said: "Reading the announcement, one of the key things it said was that it had to have the support of the local community. In Wye there is incredible support.

"I don't think there is anywhere better in the country to meet the requirements the Government set out."

Wendy Raeside, an Imperial College spokeswoman for the campus, said there were no plans to sell the site but that it is possible it could be leased out.

She said: "The last Imperial students should have completed their degrees by summer 2009.

"What we don't know is what will happen with the campus after that. Senior colleagues are looking at alternative uses for the campus and an educational use would be the preferred option."

Cllr Mark Dance, Kent County Council's member for education operations, resources and skills, said KCC had not considered applying for the funding for Wye College, but acknowledged it was a suitable site.

He said: "Our 14-24 agenda involves university provision but we need to talk to our partners at the University of Kent, Christ Church and the University of Greenwich to find out what they want to do for the future.

"They would be the natural providers to bid for money to expand what they're already doing."

Cllr Dance also speculated that Hadlow College, which provides courses in west Kent, might find the site appropriate if it wished to expand into east Kent.

A spokeswoman for regional development agency Seeda did not wish to comment on Wye specifically, but said: "Seeda will be working with Higher Education South East and local authorities to look at this new initiative from a regional perspective."

David Hewson wrote and published a book about the victorious Wye campaign, called Saved, in which KoS features prominently.

Backdown in row over steelworkers' pensions

By JENNA PUDELEK & SIMON ROBINSON
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THE Government has finally stepped down in a long-running battle over the pensions scandal which affected hundreds of former steelworkers from Kent.

The Department of Work and Pensions (DWP) confirmed this week that it would not be taking the case to the House of Lords after a Court of Appeal ruling found in favour of campaigners.

Pensions Action Group, a campaigning organisation that includes Allied Steel and Wire workers who lost their pensions when the Sheerness-based firm went bankrupt in 2002, welcomed the news.

Campaign chief Ros Altmann said: "This means that the Government is guilty of maladministration and an apology could be imminent.

"It also means that individuals may feel it is worthwhile, if they can prove that their losses were totally due to the Government's maladministration, to appeal directly to the DWP for more than the pension protection fund level of compensation."

In February the Court of Appeal judges ruled in favour of the action group over the Government.

The judges backed the findings of last year's High Court ruling, which found in favour of a damning report by the Parliamentary Ombudsman.

In March last year, the ombudsman found the DWP had acted maladministratively by failing to warn pension scheme members that they had no more that 50 per cent chance of recovering their pensions if their company became insolvent or wound up its scheme before they retired.

The watchdog's recommendations were rejected by then Pensions Secretary John Hutton who refused to restore the pensions.

A spokeswoman for the DWP said: "We have every sympathy for those who have lost their pensions through no fault of their own.

"That is why we have committed £2.9 billion to the Financial Assistance Scheme, which will help some 140,000 people affected.

"We have decided to accept the Court of Appeal's ruling on this issue and will not be contesting the issue further."

Although the Government has failed to make an official apology, the spokeswoman added: "We recognise that the ombudsman and courts have said that some official information provided under successive governments was misleading and has contributed to the distress caused to those affected."

Peter Cushing: A clarification

A FRIEND of Peter Cushing has asked KOS Media to clarify a point in last week's article about the late actor.

For many years, Mr Cushing lived in Whitstable before his death at the age of 81 at the Pilgrims Hospice in Canterbury in 1994.

He bequeathed his friend, Bernard Broughton, a collection of paintings, some of which will be sold at Canterbury Auction Gallery on Tuesday.

Our article reported incorrectly that Mr Broughton stayed at the hospice with Mr Cushing for the last three months of his life.

Mr Broughton, 74, of Kingsdown, explained: "Peter was anxious to stay in his home as long as possible before finally having to enter the hospice.

"To that end, and for the last three months of his life, my former wife and I arranged that I should stay with him in his cottage overnight, and that she would spend the days with him.

"This enabled Peter to have his wish and be at home until shortly before he died in the hospice."

Hospital £227m build plan hit by credit squeeze

By JENNA PUDELEK and TONY PATEY

TURBULENT global money markets have tossed around a Kent NHS trust which has been trying to raise £227 million for a new ground-breaking hospital.

External funding that Maidstone and Tunbridge Wells NHS Trust wanted to finance its 512-bed private finance initiative project became less attractive in the wake of the credit squeeze.

Because of the global financial crisis, the external funding – in the form of bonds – would have been perceived to be higher-risk than expected, so would have attracted higher interest rates which the trust could not afford.

So, instead, it has turned to the banks to get the cash to fund its ambitious plans for 100 per cent single-rooms with en suite facilities – the first NHS hospital of its type.

The project is in a critical phase, with the Treasury due to make a final decision within days.

Funding

Concerns have been raised that the cost of the project could spiral above what the Treasury considered affordable.

The trust's preferred bidder for the PFI project is multi-national developer Equion, which is experienced in hospital and other social sector contracts.

Graham Goddard, estates development manager for the trust, said: "In order to avoid any problems for the funding of our PFI hospital we requested that our partner, Equion, review the funding options. The review compared bond and bank debt solutions.

"We have agreed with our partner that bank funding offers the best value for money and certainty in terms of deliverability, and ensures the financial arrangements are sufficiently robust and remain within the approval limits previously agreed by the trust, the Department of Health and the Treasury."

Fallacy

PFIs have been heavily criticised by unions in the past, and the biggest health union is Unison.

Simon Bolton, Unison's South East regional officer, said: "This proves our point about PFI deals. The market is too unstable and for the trust to go to the banks means it is not going to get as good a rate as if Chancellor Alistair Darling went to the bank on its behalf.

"It means extra bank fees, and extra risks. It proves the fallacy and nonsense of PFIs because it is dependent on the market and what the market thinks. The Government should be funding this."

He said PFIs often ended up not providing what they set out to do, and patients have lost out because projects can run into financial troubles.

Mr Bolton predicted that compromises would be made at Pembury – beds being lost and "corners cut".

He added: "It will end up as something that does not meet the needs of the local community and costs twice as much as when it started.

"With very few exceptions NHS PFI projects come in over budget, with less facilities and the taxpayer picking up some private company's expenses."

Brush up

A NEW dentist surgery that will treat both private and NHS patients is set to open in Ashford.

The dental suite will be the third at the St Stephen's Health Centre in Stanhope.

Eastern and Coastal Kent Primary Care Trust (PCT) said it will mean the centre will be able to treat a further 1,800 NHS patients.

Recycled

RECYCLING rates have increased by 39 per cent in Maidstone since rubbish collection methods were changed. The increase was revealed by the first 20,000 homes in the county town to receive improved fortnightly recycling service and weekly refuse collection. Another 20,000 households will receive the service in October.

Comic Vic joins web appeal to save endangered species

COMEDIAN Vic Reeves has launched an appeal to raise funds to protect rare and endangered species.

Mr Reeves, who lives near Charing, has launched the Totally Wild Mosaic Appeal with the Aspinall Foundation, which runs Howletts and Port Lympne wild animal parks.

Schools, clubs and individuals are being invited to buy one of 2,400 virtual tiles that will make up a digital collage of a gorilla.

The tiles can be viewed at www.totallywild.mosaicappeal.com.

They cost £10 or £100 for a border tile and people who buy them can put their own message on it.

The first 10 people to buy a tile will also be given a complimentary ticket to visit one of the two parks.

There are also prizes hidden under some tiles, including a day as a junior keeper and a VIP tour of Port Lympne.

All money raised will go towards protecting endangered species, including western lowland gorillas.

The appeal is sponsored by Kent recruitment firm Red Eagle.

Wayne Hodgson, the company's managing director, said: "Red Eagle is delighted to be involved and we look forward to achieving our target of £40,000 to help the Aspinall Foundation continue its vital role as a leader in conservation and re-introduction programmes for endangered species."

Newborn baby a real beauty

Keepers' joy at animal park as elephant breeding programme comes up trumps

By PHIL REILLY
phil.reilly@kosmedia.co.uk

HOWLETTS Wild Animal Park is celebrating a new arrival – a bouncing baby elephant.

The female African calf named Uzuri, the Swahili word for beauty, was born on February 17 and weighed in at a hefty 70-80kg.

Her mother, Tammy, who was brought to the park in 1988 from Tel Aviv in Israel, was pregnant for 22 months.

Uzuri is Tammy's third calf. Older brother Jumar is 10, while sister Jara is three. Her arrival brings the Howletts herd up to 13, nine of whom were born at the park.

Elephant keeper Liz Rickard said the new arrival was adjusting well to her new surroundings.

She said: "Her sister, Jara is still taking milk from her mother but she doesn't even seem jealous of her new sibling, in fact she shows signs of being very protective.

"Tammy allows Jara to suckle for a while and then makes room for the baby to have its share."

BLAMELESS? Former KCC chairman Frank Gibson has been convicted a second time

Police union on the offensive over ex-mayor

By PHIL REILLY
phil.reilly@kosmedia.co.uk

KENT Police Federation has publicly criticised the elderly dignitary whose conviction for assaulting two officers sparked claims of police heavy-handedness.

The criticism comes after former Kent County Council chairman Frank Gibson, 82, was convicted for a separate offence this week – dabbing paint on a driving instructor's car.

Mr Gibson, who has an OBE and is a former mayor of Gravesham, was convicted of criminal damage and given a conditional discharge at Medway Magistrates Court on March 5.

He was also ordered to pay £23.50 in compensation and £100 in court costs.

It followed his conviction in January for assaulting two police officers.

Mr Gibson, who is disabled and uses a walking stick, claimed he had been manhandled by the two officers when they pulled him over in his car on Christmas Eve 2006.

The paint incident took place in October 2006, before the fracas with the police officers.

PC Ian Pointon, chairman of the Kent Police Federation, the body that represents rank and file officers, released a statement this week in which he criticised Mr Gibson for the way he portrayed himself in the media after his first conviction.

PC Pointon said: "Two of my members have been unfairly treated; they have been subjected to ridicule both on and off duty as a direct consequence of Mr Gibson's chosen means of redress.

"I cannot and will not stand idly by and let that happen."

In the latest incident, Mr Gibson was standing on a stepladder painting his garage door when the driving instructor illegally parked a few feet away.

Mr Pointon said the image of him standing on the ladder was "simply not compatible" with the frail image portrayed in the media.

He continued: "Would the real Frank Gibson please stand up. Call it temper or call it frustration, it would appear Mr Gibson has allowed his emotions to get the better of him again; once again he has been the author of his own downfall.

"I believe this second conviction clearly shows Mr Gibson in his true light, and that is far removed from the sympathy-seeking portrayal of himself as a blameless victim of police heavy-handedness."

PC Pointon called on Mr Gibson to issue a public apology to the officers involved.

Stepladder

Mr Gibson said he would not be apologising. He said: "I've not made any complaints [to the press] at all. What was written [in the press] was written by reporters who were present and heard evidence given in court. At no time have I made personal attacks on the two officers.

"I think there is something totally wrong with the policing today when a police officer indulges in criticism of that kind.

"I'm quite astonished that it's considered appropriate for police officers to treat elderly citizens the way I was treated."

Mr Gibson that the stepladder had only two steps, and that he had decided to use it to test how well he had recovered from a recent operation on his left ankle.

Hope for rural communities hit by Post Office closures

KENT County Council is working on blueprints for each local community hit by a Post Office closure but it will not be following a move across the Thames to buy-up doomed offices.

The county was in the first wave of shut downs already completed by Post Office Ltd – 56 branches across Kent – so KCC could not even contemplate Essex County Council's 11th-hour initiative.

Essex says it is looking at plans to take over loss-making offices earmarked for closure – in the second wave – but still open.

KCC held a summit on March 6 over PO closures to find out what communities wanted to do in their areas as next steps towards still trying to keep services once offered over the counters.

KCC, along with Church in Society, Action with Communities in Rural Kent and Kent Association of Local Councils, set up the meeting for community leaders and representatives and it was jointly chaired by the Rt Revd, Stephen Venner, the Bishop of Dover and Roger Gough, KCC cabinet member for regeneration.

A KCC spokesman said that following the summit it is using feedback to work out how it can help each community, whether the PO was part of an existing shop or was stand-alone.

Cllr Gough said: "We are looking at finding ways to offset the impact of these closures. We will be taking a lead in this.

"From the summit we wanted to find out what communities sought to do, but it will vary from place to place."

Case studies from other communities were presented, on topics that included setting up a community shop and addressing community transport needs.

Cllr Gough said: "Since we found out that Post Office Ltd was determined to go ahead with its closures, our focus has been to mitigate the damage wherever possible."

TWO residential care home workers have been charged with criminal neglect after a teenager was scalded in a bath, say police.

Ebenezer Adebisi, 27, of Forest Road, Walthamstow, and Sharon Johnson, 45, of Charnwood Street, Hackney, are due before magistrates in Canterbury on Wednesday.

Police launched an investigation after a 19-year-old man was injured at the Five Ways home in Kingsdown Park, Whitstable, a care home for adults with learning difficulties.

After the incident, on November 11 last year, the man was taken to QEQM hospital in Margate and later transferred to the burns unit at the Queen Victoria Hospital, East Grinstead, where he spent two weeks.

The pair have been charged under Section 44 of the Mental Capacity Act 2005.

Bluetongue vaccine is on its way to farmers

By PHIL REILLY
phil.reilly@kosmedia.co.uk

FARMERS in Kent will be among the first to get a vital vaccine against the deadly Bluetongue virus that threatens to reap havoc on the livestock industry.

The virus, which mostly affects sheep but can also prove deadly to cattle, is spread by midges that are largely dormant over the winter.

The Government has ordered large volumes of vaccine to be produced in the bid to stave off a massive outbreak this summer, with the first two million doses due to be available before the end of May.

Farmers in areas that experienced outbreaks of the disease last year, including Kent, will be first in line for the vaccine.

Last summer's outbreak was small compared with ones in continental Europe, with around 70 cases reported in the UK, including several in Kent.

Outbreak

However, countries such as Belgium, Germany and Holland experienced 1,000 per cent increases in the number of cases confirmed in the next year after the original outbreak.

Prof Dave Cavanagh, from the Institute for Animal Health, told KOS Media last month that a warm spring could lead to an outbreak before the vaccine was ready.

His colleague Professor Philip Mellor said that despite some spells of warm weather so far this year it seemed likely that midges carrying significant amounts of the virus might not appear until around the time the vaccine becomes available.

He said: "It's likely that if midges do start flying around at the end of March or the beginning of April, the ability to disseminate the virus won't be until the end of May."

Prof Mellor said the UK has a "once-only" opportunity to eliminate the virus this year.

He warned that the vaccine was untested and admitted "it is difficult to say what the likelihood is" of a serious outbreak this summer.

Kent and its neighbouring counties are currently within a bluetongue protection zone that restricts the movement of livestock.

The Department for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Defra) has ordered 22.5 million doses of the vaccine, which farmers will be able to buy through private vets.

They will be able to buy 20ml or 50ml bottles for between £16-£30, with sheep needing a 1ml dose and cattle needing 2ml.

According to a 2006 agricultural census, Kent has 1,124 sheep or cattle farms.

Kevin Attwood, the chairman of the Kent branch of the National Farmers Union, warned that the virus has the potential to "devastate the sheep sector and cause severe impacts on cattle enterprises".

He said: "Our advice come May will be 'Don't hesitate, vaccinate!' We have an opportunity to protect our livestock and we won't be deliberating healthy livestock are essential to a farmer's livelihood. We'd like to see 100 per cent uptake of vaccine for the vaccination programme to be effective."

A BOAT moored on the River Medway was sunk by thieves, say police.

Officers said people broke into the blue Monaco 36 cabin cruiser at Gillingham Marina and stole thousands of pounds worth of fixtures and fittings.

"This may have caused enough damage to sink it," said a spokesman.

Police said the boat, which was reported to have sunk on February 8, was worth in the region of £40,000.

Kent Police are appealing for information.

Meeting needs

MAINSTREAM schools now have to cater for more children with a wider range of special educational needs.

Teachers must be able to cope with a huge variety of behavioural problems from angry outburst to silent withdrawal.

The Smile Centre at Ifield Special School provides training for mainstream school staff from Gravesham so they are better equipped to provide education and care for children with physical and learning disabilities and those with autistic spectrum disorders.

But is it enough and is the inclusion policy working? Are you a parent of a pupil with special educational needs at a mainstream school and are those needs being met?

Rethink on PFI?

THE Government has been doing more U-turns than lorries approaching Operation Stack, and yet another of its cherished dreams looks like turning into a nightmare.

PFIs – private finance initiatives – were once said by ministers to be the only game in town, with private business backing projects the taxpayer would normally have paid for through the Government.

But ways of raising funds in the money market have become risky and expensive under the credit crunch, and also the government might have to show PFI deals on its balance sheet, thus increasing public debt.

We saw Maidstone and Tunbridge Wells NHS trust getting tangled up in the global credit squeeze as it tried to raise £227 million for a new state-of-the-art hospital in a PFI.

It has managed to get help from the banks, but perhaps Alistair Darling might like to take a Northern Rock-type look at PFIs.

OPINION: Hell on the M20 motorway

Much of the blame for Stack rests with County Hall, says DR STEPHEN LADYMAN MP

WHEN lorries can't embark at Dover and Operation Stack comes into action the disruption to Kent life and business is huge.

Policing it costs a fortune, Britain's hauliers lose millions and the lives of people who live on the diversion routes can be made a misery.

The French have a duty to keep their ports open or pay compensation if they cannot.

That is why last week I put down a question to the Foreign Secretary asking him to remind them of their responsibilities.

In the meantime, however, we have to find a practical alternative to the way Stack works at present.

Last June, when I was roads minister, I announced that a Quick Moveable Barrier (QMB) would be constructed between junctions 11 and 12.

It will cost £12.6 million, is being paid for by the Highways Agency and it should be ready this summer.

When it is complete it can be brought into action within minutes, allowing lorries to be parked while keeping the M20 open for two-way traffic.

This solution would have been in place already but six months earlier, when I wanted to make the announcement, Kent Police came forward with new proposals to transfer Stack onto the A20.

These proposals where vigorously opposed by Dover and Kent councils, but until they had convinced the police to withdraw them, the announcement of the QMB had to be held up.

Operation Stack is needed about 12 times a year and usually on nine of those occasions the QMB will be able to cope.

But about three times a year, the problem is so serious that extra capacity will be required.

Kent County Council's preference has always been that an off-road lorry park is needed.

Finding such a park, however, has to be the job of the council, which would be the first to complain if central government interfered in matters that involve local planning.

So, as well as announcing the QMB, I also struck a deal with KCC that it would work with the Highways Agency to identify a suitable off-road site.

It will need a huge site and KCC has only this week identified a location between Aldington and Sellindge, but it still doesn't have planning permission for it or agreement over its funding and local councillors have already started to campaign against its location.

Finding a site was never going to be an easy task, but after almost a year all the county council really has so far is a mark on a map and no buy-in from the people their proposed park will affect.

We have to assume, therefore, that Operation Stack will be blocking the M20 a few times a year for several years to come.

There is another option.

'My advice to KCC is this, if getting planning permission for an off-road site is not practical, the quicker you admit it the better'

If the off-road park can't be delivered then the QMB could be extended.

I was ready to do that and maybe the new minister will be too.

That solution would not be as versatile as an off-road park but at least it would keep the traffic moving.

So my advice to KCC is this, if getting planning permission for an off-road site is not practical, the quicker you admit it the sooner we can start talking to the new minister about a longer QMB.

Operation Stack has always given Tory councillors an excuse to point the finger at Government, despite the fact that it is the Government not KCC that is taking concrete action.

Blaming everybody else and overlooking KCC's own responsibility to act helps no-one.

At least now KCC is working constructively with the Highways Agency but it must all seem painfully slow to the people whose daily lives are disrupted.

Our tough tunnel luck

The use of Operation Stack whenever there is an interruption to cross-Channel services is a direct result of UK Government failures and should not be blamed on the French.

Check the records and you will see Stack has been used more times due to adverse weather and breakdown than it has for strike action or blockade by the French.

The facts are that since the completion of the M20 in 1991 and the opening of the Channel Tunnel in 1994, goods vehicle traffic has increased year on year to the point where our roads system can barely cope even under normal circumstances.

The over reliance on the heavy goods vehicle and the under use of the European and UK railway system is the result of both lack of investment and lack of foresight.

A lorry park could and should have been built on land reclaimed from the building of the Channel Tunnel and a national railway freight distribution system should have been in place as soon as the tunnel opened.

But neither were done and now we pay the price. The fact the French can use cross-Channel traffic as a stick to beat us with is just our tough luck.

We'll be poor relations

Mr GE Cox writes on his opinion as to the future of Manston and I do not think I have read such rubbish, and I write as an airline pilot who operated out of Manston and not someone in the ATC.

He gives the catchment as 30 miles. In fact, the catchment is 1.5 million stretching down to South London and all of Kent.

He says there is only one road. There is, but it's an excellent road. Have you driven to Gatwick lately? He says there is no infrastructure. There is some, but there is also plenty of land to increase it.

It also has the advantage of not having the air traffic control issues of the inland airfields.

It will never be a major airfield but it could thrive as a regional airfield along with such airfields as Bristol or Exeter.

There will be noise but there is not one single resident in Thanet who did not move in not knowing there was an airfield.

A thriving airfield would bring jobs and prosperity and bliss for those of us who dread Gatwick and Stansted.

If the moaners get their way all that could happen in Thanet will go to Lydd and Thanet once more will end up as the poor relation.

A matter of historical facts

For an acclaimed historian to spout inaccuracies of fact is unforgivable. For Dr David Starkey to misrepresent the making and publicity of the new historical drama The Other Boleyn Girl in such a biased and damning way as he did is very disappointing to say the least.

Let me correct Dr Starkey on a few points he damned the film for. The Other Boleyn Girl is a fictional film entertainment currently smashing box-office records in the UK and USA.

It makes no claims to historical fact. The film raises adult and young people's interest in Tudor history – as Dr Starkey's populist books and TV programmes have unquestionably done.

Secondly, Dr Starkey is incorrect in stating that the film is "typical of an American film judging British history" and "but then Hollywood is not interested in that" – Starkey here referring to actual, historic, authentic locations – "it is just interested in a pretty view".

Sorry Dr Starkey, you are wrong again. The Other Boleyn Girl is a UK (BBC Films) and USA (Columbia Pictures) co-production, with a British and American cast.

So much, Dr Starkey for your accuracy as a historian. Might I suggest he looks at a film's advertising poster and gets his facts right.

Like Dr Starkey, I am a Tudor historian. But unlike him I do my research thoroughly before making public statements.

He would do well to heed my advice to avoid such stupid and glaring inaccuracies being repeated in the future.

Poor hygiene is selfish

I wish to support wholeheartedly your campaign for hand hygiene in hospitals and healthcare centres throughout Kent.

While I agree hand hygiene is of paramount importance in the fight to prevent the spread of infections, I would go further and suggest that more thorough cleaning of hospitals generally is put in place.

When I was a child some 60 years or so years ago, hospitals smelled of strong disinfectant and as far as memory serves there weren't the problems we have today with the spread of infections even in new hospitals.

I recently have had the misfortune of visiting local and the big London hospitals for treatment and have been disgusted by the lack of cleaning in some of the public toilets in these hospitals; and if that is not bad enough, I have observed many people not washing their hands after visiting the toilet.

In my opinion it is a sign of failing standards in this selfish society in which we now live, where the attitude to law, order, common decency and standards of behaviour do not apparently apply to them.

Short-term French pain

I was interested in your front page article headed 'Roads Mayhem: Pay up, Sarkozy'.

The congestion in Kent must be mirrored in France by similar congestion around Calais etc, with lorries trying to get from France to England.

So the French government must be equally pressurised to end the strike.

The demand from ferry officers is for a 25 per cent pay rise over three years or seven per cent a year.

This is unreasonable as inflation in France is only 2.8 per cent.

The French unions are always on strike – like the British ones in the 1970s – and have disrupted Channel crossings many times.

So it is important that someone looks them down and brings a halt to the persistent striking – as happened with the coal miners' strike in the UK under Thatcher.

In the long run, if the French trade unions are brought under control there would be fewer strikes in France and less disruption to the ferries.

So it may be a pain now to have less pain later.

Are you made for art course?

BRONZE casting and life drawing courses are being offered by a studio to both established artists and those who want to begin to explore their creative side.

Meltdowns artists' studio in Ramsgate is working with Kent Adult Education to run a number of education courses.

A one-day taster session is being offered after the success of last year's bronze casting course at the centre on March 29.

A full 10-week course will be run from April to June exploring the techniques of transforming life drawing studies into three-dimensional sculptures.

At the same time, a Life Drawing into Life Modelling programme is being run. Students will learn about scaling by using measurements from a real model to inform their sculpture.

Meltdowns is running the courses from its own centre and also at the newly opened and impressive Kent Adult Education Centre, The Cube, in Folkestone.

For more information and to sign up for the courses call Kent Adult Education on 0845 606 5606.

Debating the future of the exam system

A LEADING expert will address key policy issues in secondary education – including the new diplomas – in a lecture at a Kent university.

Canterbury Christ Church University is hosting the event, led by Ken Spours, director of the centre for post-14 research and innovation at the Institute of Education, University of London.

Alternative

Dr Spours will be exploring whether it is possible to create a coherent and inclusive 14 to 19 phase of education and training in England.

The Government has announced that from September, pupils will be able to choose from a range of diplomas as a vocational alternative to GCSEs and A-levels.

A new extended diploma that would be worth four-and-a-half A-levels was announced last Friday.

Diplomas, which combine practical skills with theory, could eventually replace GCSEs and A-levels, the Government has said.

By JENNA PUDELEK
jenna.pudelek@kosmedia.co.uk

Ed Balls, the Schools Secretary, said: "Diplomas will be crucial in addressing the long-standing gaps in our educational system and bridge the pernicious academic and vocational divide."

The Conservative Party is opposed to the new qualification replacing traditional examinations.

Dr Spours, who is also head of the department for professional and continuing education at the institute, said ways of providing more work-based training had been talked about since Margaret Thatcher's Technical and Vocational Education Initiative in the 1980s.

He told KOS Media: "Over the last five years, however, there has been considerable disagreement between the Government and large sections of the research, practitioner and policy communities, as to how such a phase should be organised."

At the Association of School and College Lecturers' annual conference launch at the end of last month, concerns were raised that the complex structure and lack of clarity about how the diplomas will operate alongside A-levels could mean schools and students reject them.

Qualifications

Dr Spours explained that the idea of a single diploma system incorporating both academic and vocational qualifications came from the recommendation of the Tomlinson Review.

He was a member of the Tomlinson Working Group and is a director of the Nuffield Review of 14 to 19 Education, which is ongoing.

The lecture is being held in the Old Sessions House Lecture Theatre at the university in Canterbury on March 31 and admission is free to the public.

AN EXCITING new degree has been launched at a university.

From next September, students at Canterbury Christ Church University will be able to sign up to a BA (Hons) in Sonic Arts.

The high-tech sounding course teaches students how performances, artwork and website displays can be created and related to the manipulation of sound.

Dr Andrew Gower, director of the Broadstairs campus where the new degree will be based, said: "Sonic Arts students will study the latest developments in sound recording and audio processing.

"The students will also have the exciting opportunity to develop their creative ideas in a range of contexts."

The degree is aimed at students who want to work in the music industry as sound artists, sound engineers or composers.

The degree will enable students to pursue careers within the music industry as sound artists, sound engineers or composers and use their knowledge in a community or education setting.

Students will be able to access state-of-the-art facilities including a specialist digital imaging and processing suite, a photography studio, editing suite, technical support and the latest digital single-lens reflex cameras.

The new BA (Hons) degree in photography at Canterbury Christ Church University will be available from September.

Lectures, seminars and practical demonstrations will be taught at the university's Broadstairs Campus.

Karen Shepherdson, who is principal lecturer for the university's media department, said: "This is an exciting opportunity for creative people with a real interest in photography to hone their talents and broaden their horizons.

"The students will get the opportunity to take part in regular field trips, exhibition and gallery visits.

"The programme will be supported by visiting professionals, who will further enhance the students' learning experience."

The first year of the three-year course begins with an introduction to creative photography and critical approaches to photography.

Digital media, digital imaging and visual research will also be explored.

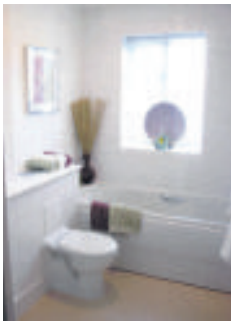
IDEAL FIRST HOME OR INVESTMENT OPPORTUNITY

Only six apartments remain for sale at Stonebridge Place - a brand new development in Edenbridge built by Sevenoaks-based firm Regalpoint comprising one and two bedroom properties, with private under cover parking and lifts.

The apartments are ready for early occupation and anyone reserving now will receive £500 a month mortgage subsidy for 12 months (exchange contracts in 28 days).

Formerly a granary, which became redundant in the middle of the last century, the land and buildings belonged to the Great Stone Bridge Trust, which was endowed with property to maintain the town's famous ancient bridge.

Regalpoint's Managing Director, Tony Porter, said: "We are pleased to have played a part in restoring this part of Edenbridge back to good use. We have worked, where possible, with the Great Stone Bridge Trust in putting this development together and have helped with some landscaping work on the Riverside Walk.



"Stonebridge Place' is a lovely development of 10 apartments in total, which is within walking distance of all the amenities in the High street, and also has access to two Train stations – ideal for the commuter. Of course with the River bank and miles of open countryside around Edenbridge – there are various beautiful walks to be enjoyed at the weekend or during the summer evenings"

An opportunity not to be missed with prices for the apartments starting from £179,950 and the mortgage subsidy on offer – telephone to-day to make your appointment to view these apartments - RPC Land and New Homes on 01732 363633 or visit the web site www.rpcnewhomes.co.uk

BRAND NEW HOMES WITHIN WALKING DISTANCE OF MAIN LINE STATION

Fernham Homes are currently building smart new apartments in an established residential road in the heart of the delightful town of Tonbridge in Kent.

Whilst buying a new build is always a good investment, being able to secure a property within walking distance of a main line station obviously has enormous benefits. There are no costly fuel bills, no need to take the car and sit in traffic jams, by using the train you are helping the planet, you are immune to rising Congestion Charges and of course this particular station gives commuter fast train links to central London, so owners can enjoy the semi rural location of Tonbridge knowing that the metropolis is reachable in under an hour.

Walking Distance of High Street Shops

Consort Place, Wincliff Road is within a few minutes walk of the high street in Tonbridge. This is an excellent shopping area with a good choice of shops together with restaurants and bars.

For road users the easily accessible A21 joins directly with the M25 London orbital.

Homes With An Excellent Specification

There are eight homes comprising 4, one bedroom and 4, two bedroom duplex homes.

These excellent homes offer buyers a good specification with attractive units and worktops, appliances include gas hob, electric oven and extractor hood, integrated fridge with freezer compartment and a washer/dryer.

Bathrooms afford sparkling, fashionable white sanitary ware with contemporary style chrome taps and push button dual flush WC. and stylish tiles.

With chrome furniture to internal doors, smooth ceilings, ceramic tiling to communal entrance hall floor, gas central heating, carpets and a 10 year NHBC Buildmark warranty, these homes, with a 125 year lease make an excellent purchase.

There is an entry phone system for several of the homes, and private gardens to apartments 3 and 4. Wrought iron railings to the front of the development give the homes a certain character. There is external lighting to communal areas and for the active - a cycle rack!

Mary-Anne Staddon, Sales Director at Fernham Homes comments, "For all the reasons stated, Consort Place is attracting a lot of interest, which is probably why we have already sold one off plan".

Prices start from £125,000

Get the most from the coast from the experts

Land owners should seek professional advice to get the best price for their plots

The urban renaissance of Kent's coastal towns is leading to a strong demand for residential development sites and land owners keen to cash in on the increasing interest in living by the sea should get the right advice first according to property experts RPC Land and New Homes.

The smaller coastal towers of Faversham, Herne Bay, Sandwich, Whitstable, Deal, and Hythe have strong urban character and heritage which are popular targets for house developers.

Accordingly development land prices are rising ahead of many other parts of the county.

Financial investment, major regeneration work and soon to be improved rail links to other coastal towns such as Margate, Folkestone and Dover are also opening the eyes of housebuilders to other parts of the Kent coastline. This will also provide a boost to land prices.

With climate change leading to warmer temperatures and rising costs of flights to foreign holiday destinations, Kent's seaside towns are well placed to once again become popular destinations for those seeking to enjoy the cool sea breeze and avoid horrors of modern day foreign travel.

However, landowners on the coast hoping to sell potential development sites should seek expert advice before proceeding.

Breathe

RPC Land Director Nigel Fisher said: "A number of different factors have come together to breathe new life into some parts of the Kent coastline from a house-building point of view.

"There is a real surge in popularity for coastal properties, with new homes sales achieving over £300 per square foot in some areas and developers keen to purchase good quality plots to service this need.

"However, to achieve the best possible price for a coastal plot it is important to talk to a professional early on who can advise on the right type and density of property for a location as well as advise on planning issues and marketing. Flood risk assessments, infrastructure and drainage issues also need to be considered."

SEA VIEW: Kent coastal towns such as Whitstable are proving very popular with developers with land prices rising faster than those in other parts of the county. The development pictured is located in Sea Street, Whitstable

Demand for land is still there says RPC

Despite the predicted slowdown in house prices, there is still a demand for more land for development to meet Government targets, according to Kent property experts RPC Land and New Homes.

The Government has said that three million new homes need to be built by 2020 and promised to deliver more than 70,000 affordable properties a year by 2011, in an £8billion drive to boost supply.

However, the Office for National Statistics said that by 2031, the UK population is expected to have risen from its current level of 60 million to 71 million due to longer life expectancy and increased levels of immigration. If these projections are accurate, further strain will be put on the housing market as, currently, levels needed to meet demand are not being achieved.

RPC Land Director Mark Linington said: "Although there is clearly a slowdown in the housing market, this should not deflect from the need for more land to match development projections which, are currently not being met due to a lack of proper reform in the planning process and the dwindling number of brownfield sites among other factors.

"Although there is downward pressure on land values due to the slowdown in the housing market well located sites with the right planning consent are still attracting a good level of interest from developers. In a toughening market it is even more important to seek early advice from a development specialist to ensure that a housing scheme is maximising value."

Interest rates, affordable housing levels and local authority costs are rising steeply and landowners looking to sell are being urged to talk to the experts if they want to get the best possible price for their plots.

Mark Linington added: "The demand for land is certainly there as homes need to be built but anyone thinking of selling a plot for redevelopment needs to make sure they are taking expert advice. Talking to a professional means a landowner can get the most appropriate development which will return the best possible price."

1. Advertisements will be accepted only on the express condition that the advertiser warrants that the advertisement does not in any way contravene any existing legislation and in particular the Trade and Description Act 1968 and the Consumer Credit Act 1974.
2. It is the responsibility of all advertisers to ensure that all advertising meets all forms of government legislation and KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd (the "media owner") takes no responsibility for liability in errors and omissions to the content of our media.
3. All rates quoted are subject to VAT at the rate currently in force at the time the advertisement appears.
4. All rates within the annual advertising agreement will be rate protected for 12 months from the first date of publication under the signed agreement.
5. Any unsuitable material posted on any website belonging to KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd by the advertiser or any associated third party will be removed or refused. All passwords and security supplied to the advertiser by KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd in relation to the use of the posting of material via the media owner's online administration tool will be the responsibility of the advertiser. The advertiser indemnifies KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd against any damages as a result of misuse of these privileges by either the advertiser or any third party given password privileges by the advertiser.
6. KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd reserves the right to change passwords intermittently to ensure the overall and ongoing security of its websites within the public domain.
7. Copyright and licenses for voice-over/music/photography or film for advertising promotions or otherwise within the various forms of media in print, online and moving film owned by KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd must have been sought, verified or paid for by the advertiser where applicable. Approval or permissions must have been given by any potential beneficial owner voice-over or music. The advertiser must be able to verify any statements or claims (promotional or otherwise) in relation to their products/services promoted within any of the media offerings belonging to KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd.
8. Where shrinkage of an advertisement occurs for whatever reason, the advertisement will be charged to the nearest full centimetre where it relates to the media owner's printed publications. This will NOT apply to full-page advertisements, which remain full pages even after shrinkage.
9. KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd reserves the right to omit or refuse any advertisement/commercial/web content without notice or explanation. In these terms the word "advertiser" shall be construed to include any person or organisation placing an advertisement on behalf of another.
10. A guarantee of insertion cannot be given and the media owners shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused by any error inaccuracy within your marketing content. In no case shall the total liability of the media owner for any error or omission exceed the price charged by the media owners for that advertising.
11. No liability is accepted for any loss or damage alleged to have arisen through delay in forwarding replies to Box numbers, however caused, nor for the loss or damage to any artwork supplied.
12. Claims for any error or inaccuracy in your media messages with KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd must be made in writing to the accounts department within 10 days of publishing
13. KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd accepts no responsibility for any errors or omissions made on their websites by the advertiser.
14. KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd has the right to cancel the advertiser's annual membership without notice should the advertiser deliberately publish out of date material or content on any of the media owner's online digital platforms. KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd will seek to recover, in full, all outstanding invoices in relation to the signed annual membership as a result of the advertiser's negligence in this regard and reserves the right to claim damages for any potential vexatious action via the advertiser.
15. Advertisers are requested to check their advertisements after the first insertion. The media owner will not be responsible for any errors on subsequent insertions, which have not been advised to them in writing.
16. A minimum of one month's notice must be given in writing for any cancellation of the signed annual advertiser's agreement. Upon cancellation, all discounts from KOS Media's standard effective media advertising rate card (July 2007-June 2008) will be recalculated and adjusted accordingly in line with KOS Media's standard media rate card (effective July 2007-June 2008) and will reflect the revised length of commitment denoted by the advertiser's written cancellation. Any surcharges, refunds or costs in relation to the production of the advertiser's TV commercial for the commitment set out within the advertiser's agreement will be met in full by the advertiser as per KOS Media's standard media advertising rate card (July 2007-June 2008). Discounts will be reapplied and any refunds or surcharges will be paid by either party within 30 days of the advertiser's written cancellation. Any other advertising placed must give a minimum of seven days' written notice and any discounts given for series bookings will be forfeited by the advertiser upon cancellation.
17. The advertiser must agree to the date and time of filming of the TV advertising commercial supplied by KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd within the advertiser's agreement, (Platinum, Gold, Silver standard of commercial). Should, for any reason, the advertiser not be available at the agreed time without giving sufficient notice (at least 48 hours), KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd reserves the right to charge for any further TV production at its standard published hourly rate should the advertiser still wish to use KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd's production services to complete its TV commercial or photographic imagery included in the advertiser's agreement. The advertiser will approve and accept that there are only two choices of voice-over and music offered by KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd. Should an advertiser wish to use other voice-overs or non-copyright free music it is the responsibility of the advertiser to pay the PRS rights should they be required to do so. Any changes to or failure to approve the TV production by the deadlines agreed between both parties will result in KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd being given permission by the advertiser to replace the TV commercial with pictures or stills from a choice of photography supplied by the media owner until the advertiser can supply a TV commercial produced at their own cost and risk outside of this agreement. The advertiser also accepts and agrees that this action would not reduce the value or cost of their membership. Any cost of changes required to the TV commercial throughout the advertiser's agreement will be borne by the advertiser outside of this agreement.
18. Each advertiser accepts that their ranking and position within KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd's search engine will be equal to those within their category (Platinum, Gold, Silver, Bronze, etc) other than they will be ranked based on the search engine criteria of optimisation within their level (Platinum, Gold, Silver or Bronze).
19. Any delivery claims made by the advertiser or discount vouchers published within the print or online media of KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd and any action as a result of the public or otherwise is the sole responsibility of the advertiser. Any claims resulting from this via KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd must be met by the advertiser.
20. a. All credit accounts due for payment shall be notified to the Advertiser by the 30th day following the date of the invoice, time to be of the essence. All sums due to KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd or RBS Factoring shall be paid in full, and the Advertiser shall have no right of set off in any circumstances.

    b. In the event that payment is not received by KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd or RBS Factoring by the due date, the media owner shall be entitled to suspend all further advertising until payment is received and/or repudiate the contract.

    c. In the event that payment is not received by KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd by the due date, the media owner reserves the right to charge interest on all overdue balances calculated on a daily basis at the rate of two per cent above the minimum lending rate of National Westminster Bank Plc from time to time in force.

    d. Not withstanding anything in these terms and conditions or implied to the contrary, in the event of the Advertiser ceasing to use the services of KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd (for whatever reason), the whole amount of monies due from the Advertiser to the date of cessation shall fall due for immediate payment.

    e. The Advertiser will be liable for all costs incurred by KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd in the recovery of debts not paid by the due date.

    f. Payment may be made by cheque, credit transfer, direct debit, cash and any major credit card.
21. Any discount which KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd may have agreed with the Advertiser shall be forfeited in the event of failure by the Advertiser to complete the contract or to meet the above credit terms.
22. Advertising Agency commission will be allowed to those advertisers recognised by the Newspaper Society, but shall not exceed ten per cent and will be subject to the terms of that recognition. This commission will not be allowed if the Advertising Agency fails to meet the terms.
23. All private advertisement and certain categories as laid down by KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd must be prepaid.
24. The Advertiser agrees to indemnify KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd in respect of all costs, damages or other charges falling upon the media owners or any of the companies within the KOS Media Group as the result of legal action or threatened legal action or threatened legal arising from the publication of any advertisement or advertising promotion.
25. An order for an advertisement shall amount to acceptance of these terms and conditions, and any condition placed on an order by an Advertiser shall be null and void in so far as it conflicts with them.
26. Copyright in advertisements produced wholly or partially by the media owners belong to KOS Media (Publishing) Ltd. Advertisers may not reproduce such advertisements without the media owner's consent.

Scirocco comes storming back

By STEVE LOADER

LIKE the hurricane force of its namesake wind, the VW Scirocco is roaring back with a stunning new look after a 14-year absence.

And VW says the dramatic styling clothes the "most dynamic and technologically advanced production coupé Volkswagen has ever built".

It needs to be, after the driver-orientated 1974 original and its edgy Giorgetto Giugiaro-designed body made such a huge impact and was followed up by a more rounded, though arguably less dramatic, Mark II in 1981.

The latter was supplanted and eventually replaced by the much-missed and more muscular Corrado in 1993 – this, in turn, was axed three years later.

The modern-day successor to both these VW sporting icons was first seen as the Iroc concept car in 2006 and is now set to go on sale here in September, priced from around £20,500.

VW says the original Scirocco formula is carried over: coupé styling, four seats, practical hatchback boot and sharp, responsive dynamics, but a small yet distinctive difference will be seized upon by Volkswagen fans: the decision to move the VW roundel from the grille to the bonnet, no doubt necessitated by the narrow and more aerodynamic front end.

The 292-litre boot compares well with the Golf hatchback's 350, though folding the rear seats to extend this to 755, compared with the Golf's 1,305, shows the penalty of the rakish coupé rear end.

But load-carrying is a bonus rather than an essential for this eye-catching new car and VW highlights that the Scirocco has two contoured rear seats and decent headroom and, while it looks big, wide and low slung, its 'road footprint' compares well with the current Golf GTI.

The coupé's rear hatch will be topped by a subtle aerodynamic wing and buyers can specify a panoramic sunroof to enhance what is claimed to be an airy interior for a coupé.

The new Scirocco will launch in the UK with a turbocharged 198bhp 2.0-litre four-cylinder petrol engine married to either a six-speed manual or six-speed DSG auto gearbox. Common rail diesel and more petrol engines are promised before the end of 2008.

Fiesta beats Verve in Ford name game

DESPITE 30 years' history, Ford considered axing the Fiesta name for its next generation supermini.

This was no publicity stunt; the long-running Escort label was elbowed out in favour of the Focus in the 1990s and the Mondeo was at risk, ahead of launching the latest version of that key model.

Ford also used the name Verve for various new Fiesta concept cars and this drew much positive response.

But Fiesta stays, said Ford's Europe president John Fleming: "There was a lot of discussion over the name, but the Fiesta name builds on 30 years of history – and it's a good history – so it's very fitting for the name to continue."

However, he conceded that Verve was a good badge – it has been registered worldwide and could yet appear on a future model.

The new-look Fiesta has more 'verve' about it though, whether in three or five-door guise and will hit the market this autumn.

Chrysler 'heavy' gets even tougher for '08

WHETHER you like the Chrysler 300C for looking like a Mafia hitman's wheels or a poor man's Bentley, it has been a big success for Chrysler.

The handling of this imposing saloon and Touring estate spin-off might be off the pace, but this detail is usually ignored in favour of the car's muscular proportions and retro American style, complemented by massive wheels, plus amazing value for money.

Indeed, with the optional 'Bentley' grille, the 300C looks like it should cost twice what it does – dealers have struggled to keep up with demand and used prices have remained buoyant.

The range has now had a facelift for the '08 model year, yet still starts at just £27,495 for the entry-level Mercedes-powered diesel.

There is also an all-new diesel flagship (from £32,495 and pictured) featuring 'SRT-Design' accoutrements as used on the 6.1-litre V8 Hemi SRT-8 (£40,995) petrol-powered performance flagship.

Mercifully, the exterior re-work has been subtle and Chrysler has been busier where it needed to be; the interior has had a more dramatic makeover.

Hyundai goes the extra length for i30 Estate

HAVING launched one of the more stylish newcomers to the Ford Focus or family hatchback sector recently, Hyundai was under pressure to come up with a good-looking estate version.

The Korean marque has risen to the challenge; the new i30 hatchback platform has been stretched by 50mm to boost leg and headroom and manages to be practical and spacious without looking too utilitarian.

Prices start from £12,995 with generous standard kit and goes on sale on April 2.

Budget comment

by motoring editor

STEVELOADER

BLIMEY – did Captain Darling actually heed the motoring lobby ahead of his first Budget?

Or was it fear of a year 2000-style fuel protest/panic bringing an increasingly tottery Government to its knees?

Whatever the reason – I suspect it was the latter – our anti-car rulers decided that a proposed 2p-a-litre rise in fuel duty at the pumps from April should be deferred until October – the Tunbridge Wells-based Freight Trade Association reckons this will save hauliers £140m alone.

Of course, Chancellor Darling presented the decision as a desire "to support the economy now and help business and families" before making it clear that this was a temporary reprieve alongside the following:

- Fuel duty to rise by 0.5p per litre in real terms in 2010
- Emissions to be reviewed, possibly leading to ambitious 80 per cent cuts in targets ahead of 2050
- Pushing the EU for even tougher targets on car emissions.
- Major reform of vehicle excise duty from 2009; by 2010, the lowest polluting new cars will attract no road tax in the first year while the biggest 'gas guzzlers' pay as much as £950. In all, 88 per cent of all cars on the road will pay a higher road tax according to pressure group, Taxpayers' Alliance.

In other words: "We listened and were afraid you might get angry if we didn't, but you will take this medicine."

And it is probably about time we did, but drivers and the motor industry alike are about to go through a motoring upheaval like never before.

New technology waits in the wings – hydrogen power or electric power without the emissions being passed 'up the line' – but a lot of time and money is required before either is fully ready for the market.

What have we got in the meantime? Hybrid power, as pioneered by Toyota/Lexus and Honda though the jury is out on whether this is an expensive blind alley, even if Government policies and the London Congestion Charge favour it.

Bio power could prolong internal combustion engine technology without harmful emissions, but only if the fuel can be produced without stealing land away from food production.

Which leaves making the best of what we've got until the 'cavalry' arrives, starting with recognition that, in most cases, we could drive smaller and more efficient cars than those we currently drive.

In addition, new cars can be made lighter and more fuel-efficient through different gearing, tyres with lower rolling resistance, lighter oils and by reducing or cutting out power-sapping units such as air conditioning and alternators. Volkswagen's eco-friendly BlueMotion series and certain BMW and Peugeot models show what can be done.

Then again, neither car owners nor the Government should be quick to scrap perfectly good vehicles, when building new ones is a major source of global emissions.

MOTORLINE ŠKODA USED CAR EVENT

Due to an exceptionally busy March, we now find ourselves over stocked with quality used vehicles.

For one week only, leading up to and including the weekend of 15th and 16th March, we will be asking you to make us an offer on any of our used vehicles.

- No sensible offer will be refused.
- Should we fail to meet your expectations, we will get as close as we can, which will undoubtedly still be a bargain.
- Your part exchange will still be welcome.
- Competitive finance will still be available as part of the offer, and quotations will be available upon request.
- You will still benefit from all of the features of the Škoda Approved Used Car Programme including 12 months minimum comprehensive parts & labour warranty, 12 months minimum RAC breakdown & recovery, and a Škoda approved multi-point car inspection.
- To view our used car stock and bid on your chosen vehicle, visit www.motorline.co.uk/skoda and click on the used cars link. Or call Canterbury 01227 784333 or Dartford 01322 280545, and ask for a stock list.
- Deals will be agreed, and vehicles marked as sold on a first-come-first-served basis. The 'make an offer' feature on our website could come in very handy!

VolkswagenPassat

The people's car to please more buyers

IT might be quite a bit bigger than Volkswagen's original 'people's car', the Beetle, but the latest Passat goes a long way to pleasing a lot of people.

At one end of its range it competes with everyday company car hacks like the Toyota Avensis and Vauxhall Vectra – the Ford Mondeo has moved a little upmarket – while competing with executive models at its other extreme.

Not everyone is going to be seduced by a three-pointed star or BMW propeller badge, when they can buy a similarly roomy, fully loaded and sleek Passat for a lot less.

Indeed, one can imagine Audi chiefs getting a bit shirty in 2005 after seeing their big sister brand launch this classy rival to their own A4 and A6 models.

To add insult to injury, the Passat Estate lugs a sizeable load with some elegance too, making it a practical as well as good looking alternative to so-called 'lifestyle estates'.

But can the Passat really compete with big executive brands?

We picked a 2.0 TDI 170 SEL for this test; barring the powerful 3.2 petrol 4Motion SEL this is the range flagship and our car also had the optional DSG gearbox – the now famous twin-clutch unit that drives beautifully whether you want it to be an auto or manual.

It is an option, at a cost of £1,320, that you need to consider if you genuinely want to buy the Passat as an alternative to some of the big executive makes and models – the extra cost of the 'box is nothing compared with the overall saving you would make.

With six speeds, it changes as smoothly or even better than a more expensive model, yet the twin-clutch feature means there is no debilitating effect on the car's performance, although emissions and economy do suffer slightly.

This is a small price to pay though for a gearbox for all situations and moods, including the option to drive the big yet nimble Passat like a manual on a winding lane.

The car's chassis and dynamics represent a major advance on its beautifully made yet flawed predecessor; the latest car's underpinnings are based on the excellent Golf platform that has revolutionised so many other models across the ever-growing VW family.

Grip and responsiveness is excellent, yet the car delivers just the right level of comfort and refinement – especially noticeable at this time of the year across rural Kent as the winter weather delivers its usual upsurge of potholes, fraying edges and cracks.

Needless to say, even in this high output 170PS form, the 2.0-litre VW diesel is smooth and is well insulated from the cabin in any case, making the Passat a magnificent motorway cruiser and capable of delivering mid-40s to 50mpg.

Cabin ambience is also high quality, with well-arranged and durable switchgear, plentiful stowage pockets and cubby holes and excellent space efficiency that underlines how well the car competes with the likes of the Mercedes E-Class, BMW 5-Series and Audi A6 from a much higher price range.

And the provision of spacious leg and head room for three in the rear has not been at the expense of the boot – one of the largest in its class and a clue to the Estate's huge load-lugging capacity.

OK, the latest Passat is no 'people's car' in the image of the original Beetle, but it does offer the comforts of a higher class to the mass market.

WARRANTY: Buy yourself an off-road Suzuki and you get a six-month parts warranty too

Fun guaranteed

SUZUKI has announced a six-month parts warranty on all new 2008 official off-road machines bought through authorised dealers.

It applies to all 2008 model year RM, RM-Z and DR-Z machines and covers all non-consumable items from the point of purchase.

The parts-only warranty applies specifically to manufacturing defects for a period of six months from sale to the first owner/user. Wear and tear items are not covered.

It is provided on condition that the motorcycle is serviced by an authorised Suzuki off-road dealer in accordance with the maintenance schedule.

Cover does not include damage or loss caused by racing or competition use.

Bike buying tips

- Finance – beat rising rates; shop around for cheap deals
- Interest-free credit – watch for introductory offers where payments soar after the 'honeymoon' period
- Free insurance – check that any no claims bonus can be transferred after the first free year
- Specification – if you pay top price, make sure you are getting the latest model. Buying an old specification new bike could save as much as 20 per cent, but it will be worth considerably less after being laid up most of the winter
- Pre-registration – can be a good buy but should be brand new with delivery mileage only – not an ex-demonstrator that may have been 'thrashed'
- Extras – check that the price you pay includes any additional security features, road tax, number plates and fuel.

Bike industry wants apology and better monitoring after tax evasion slur

by STEVE LOADER

GOVERNMENT officials have been left red-faced after retracting claims that nearly 40 per cent of motorcyclists evade vehicle excise duty (VED).

The allegation in a House of Commons Public Accounts Committee has since been countered by a Department for Transport (DfT) report estimating evasion at a more believable 6.5 per cent of motorcyclists.

David Taylor, chief executive of the Motor Cycle Industry Association (MCIA) said: "The motorcycle industry has said for years that the methods of calculating VED evasion were deeply flawed, but we have been consistently ignored. In fact, we still say the methodology is wrong. Although the latest figures are more believable, it's only the way data is collected that's changed. The DfT should be embarrassed and should apologise to the majority of powered two-wheeler (PTW) riders who clearly do pay VED."

In recent years the DfT has claimed that anything up to half of all PTW users evade road tax. Now PTW users have been largely vindicated by findings from the 2007 DfT survey.

The new results, based on detailed photographic (ANPR) analysis of vehicles surveyed rather than the previous reliance on jottings by people sat at the roadside, shows that only 6.5 per cent of PTWs seen on the road did not appear on the DVLA's record of taxed vehicles.

Increased use of ANPR reveals that the number of motorcycles evading payment could be just a third of the figure previously claimed by the DfT, while revenue lost from non-payment has been just a fifth of the amount the DVLA has tried to chase.

An independent report commissioned by the DfT in 2007 identified several problems with the estimate of evasion among PTWs, but the investigation was discontinued before concerns could be addressed.

While the latest 2007 DfT figures reflect the level of VED evasion more accurately than previous surveys, the bike lobby claims there are still flaws likely to lead the DfT to continue overstating the true size of the problem.

The MCIA and other motorcycle organisations have challenged DfT figures for many years, yet both the National Audit Office and House of Commons Public Accounts Committee have recently accepted results without properly considering accuracy and validity, finding it all too easy to publicly criticise PTW users.

As well as unfairly maligning PTW users, the bike group says this puts pressure on the DVLA to tackle a far higher level of evasion than actually exists, wasting public money chasing revenue that was never being lost in the first place.

David Taylor added: "There will always be a small minority of PTW users evading road tax and, as with the far higher number of car tax evaders, this should not be tolerated by those who do pay.

"The latest findings should end suggestions that all motorcycles should be electronically tagged and we call on the DfT to refine its survey methods even further and put an end to the continuing overstatement of VED evasion among motorcyclists."

MOTOR HARLEY-DAVIDSON CYCLES

Celebrating ten years of the popular R-Series

YAMAHA celebrates a decade of R-Series motorcycles this weekend – a line started by the legendary original YZF-R1 back in 1998.

And bike enthusiasts are invited to visit participating Yamaha dealers on Saturday to enter a free competition offering three lucky people a place on the Yamaha Race Academy (YRA), comprising a VIP weekend at the Spanish MotoGP at the Circuit de Catalunya.

From there, the three winners will be whisked off to the Ascari Race Circuit in Southern Spain to share the track with some Yamaha race stars and be mentored by Yamaha's instructors, while sampling the famous circuit's twists and turns.

Dealers will also be running the 'Zero Worship' promotion – zero per cent finance over 30 months – on 16 Yamaha models including the YZF-R1 (pictured) and R6.

Kent racer keeps it in the county

KENT racer Michael Neeves took to Brands Hatch last weekend to contest the first round of the Bemsee National Powerbike Championship on his Yamaha R1.

As a test rider for the world's biggest motorcycling publication, Motorcycle News, Michael is no stranger to the world of fast bikes and race tracks, but racing is a relatively new adventure.

He managed fifth in the Bemsee last year and picked up wins at Brands Hatch and Pembrey in Wales, but hopes to do even better this year and with excellent local support and sponsorship from two Kent companies: tyre and wheel company Benjyalloys in Canterbury and tarmac testers, PJB Technical Services in Ramsgate – Michael and his team are pictured.

He'll be racing his 180mph Yamaha R1 at some of the best racetracks in the UK in the 10-round championship, as well as competing at a meeting in Croix, northern France.

Michael said: "I'm chuffed to bits to have the support of my brother Ben, who owns Benjyalloys, and my good friend Paul Baker, who owns PJB Technical Services.

"It's good to have friends and family around when you're racing as it's good for morale, especially when things don't quite go to plan.

"Last weekend at Brands was a bit of a nightmare actually. My bike is usually ultra-reliable but on the Friday practice it developed a gear selection problem. It got so bad I had to miss the final two races of the weekend, which I'm gutted about.

"In one of my races I was stuck in 3rd gear for the duration and still managed to finish 5th. If I had all six gears I'm sure I could've challenged for the win! But that's racing.

"We're getting the bike fixed and hopefully it will be ready for the next meeting at Donington on Easter weekend."

Scooter demand from young drives market

CATCH them young and hope to welcome them back later, was how Sittingbourne motorcycle shop manager John Clarke described the state of the bike market.

John, who runs Colwins in Frederick Street, said: "There has been a definite revival of interest from the youngsters – they love the new scooter-style machines; the helmets, the gear and the image that goes with them.

"But a lot will then graduate to cars after a few years.

"A few will stay with bikes – perhaps for commuting or rather than buying a second car when they have a family.

"We always get a few coming back at, say 24-25, which is why we always keep 10-15 bigger used bikes available – such as the (Yamaha) Fazer and (Honda) Fireblade plus a few cruisers.

"And we are hoping many young riders will keep an interest in bikes for a long time and may still come back.

Colwins' biggest selling new bike models are the Piaggio NRG (pictured, from £1,699) and Derbi Senda (from £2,200), which John described as: "Rugged good quality machines able to take the punishment young riders hand out to them.

"The biggest battle we have is with parents having seen Chinese-built machines on the web for £900, who don't want to pay more for a quality machine, but you get what you pay for."

He added that he can also normally do a good deal on insurance and usually throws in a £50 security lock in addition to the machine's own security.

"It's sensible to help ensure that they don't have claims," said John.

Higher profile paints a red, rosy future

ITALIAN performance bike brand Ducati is riding high after a buoyant 2007, winning its first ever MotoGP World Championship and posting big sales in the UK.

Ducati says UK success has been down to a Sportsbike-orientated market falling for the new Ducati 1098 and 1098S superbikes.

But the surprise package has been the Hypermotard (pictured), now a cult machine and delivering much of a near 40 per cent increase in UK sales for the red brand during 2007.

Visitors to service centres and dealers have also been encouraged by Ducati cutting servicing costs by as much as half after launching new service schedules, adding to customer confidence derived from the brand's much publicised quality drive and reduced warranty claims.

Further sales and presence have come from astonishing growth in branded clothing and accessories sales – up 16 and 69 per cent respectively.

Watch your business hit new heights

IF you want to take your business promotion up, up and away in a beautiful balloon now's your chance.

Sponsors are being sought for one of Britain's newest and fastest growing tourist attractions – HiFlyers – which are being located at more than seven of the nation's most scenic tourist sites by 2010, with one already at Leeds Castle.

HiFlyers are giant passenger-carrying, helium-filled tethered balloons, manufactured by world-renowned aeronautical scientist Per Lindstrand – famous flying partner of Sir Richard Branson and record holder for altitude, distance and duration of balloon flights – and operated by Lindstrand AeroPlatforms Ltd, a subsidiary of AeroPlatforms Plc.

HIGH UP: Leeds' balloon

First Rights, the leading rights and sponsorship business within the First Artist Corporation, is co-ordinating the search for a single sponsor for each balloon on behalf of Lindstrand AeroPlatforms.

The complete package will allow one major sponsor to brand each balloon's entire facia and viewing platform, which rise to a height of 120m, as well as all marketing materials such as tickets, website, brochures and corporate hospitality.

The balloons, tethered to a giant winch by a cable, can carry up to 30 people at a time in a gondola and are fully certified by the European Aviation Safety Agency and regulated by the Civil Aviation Authority. They can also be used for corporate parties or weddings.

£60m takeover deal sees Eddie Stobart making big in-roads

By TONY PATEY
tony.patey@kosmedia.co.uk

LET'S have it, folks, for the Wurzels:

"I want to be an Eddie Stobart driver,
"Behind the wheel is where I want to be,
"O let me be an Eddie Stobart driver (ooh ahh),
"The finest firm in haulage history."

That chart-buster (well, okay, it was in the lower reaches of the top 100 in 1995 by the Combine Harvester group) was on the lips of Kent businesspeople this week as Stobart, which employs 150 at a transport site at Sittingbourne, went on a takeover drive.

It overtook Irlam, one of the UK's largest independently owned transport groups, in a £60 million deal which accelerates Stobart to one of the nation's leading multimodal transport and logistics providers.

The enlarged Stobart group – started in the middle of the last century near Carlisle by the original Eddie, delivering agricultural material – will have net assets of more than £320million, operating 1,300 trucks, 2,300 trailers and employing more than 3,500 people in the UK.

Cheshire-based Irlam dates back to 1964 when it was set up by James Irlam and grew mainly by transporting milk churns to Manchester dairies and returning with supplies for local farms.

ON THE ROAD: The famous Stobart livery

It was among Stobart's first acquisitions since being listed on the stock market last September. Irlam provides transport, warehousing and contract packing services for blue chip companies including Proctor & Gamble, Danone Waters and Pedigree.

Irlam will continue to operate under its own brand and management team and there will not be any redundancies under the proposals.

By 1970 Stobart consisted of three main parts; fertilizer, haulage and farm shop, and they were eventually split up between the family members, with Edward jnr, Eddie's son, having haulage and the name, Eddie Stobart Ltd.

In 1976, Edward and his fleet of eight lorries moved to Carlisle to be closer to the M6 motorway. One of Eddie's habits was to name his lorry cabins with female names – the first four were Twiggy, Tammy (Wynette), Dolly (Parton), and Suzi (Quatro) – and he built a strong corporate image and reputation.

In the 1980s and 90s, if any driver was not wearing a tie on duty, he or she could face disciplinary action. The distinctive red and green livery led to the formation of an Eddie Stobart spotters fan club – as well as a range of model toys.

In 2002, following difficulties caused by the fuel crisis, Edward Stobart sold the company to his younger brother William and William's business partner and old school friend Andrew Tinkler, and under the new deal their combined shareholding will fall to 25 per cent compared with 28 per cent before.

However, in the recent deals spin, Stobart is also buying a private loss-making business, owned by William Stobart and Mr Tinkler, for £10m, and taken out an option to buy Carlisle Airport, also owned by Mr Stobart and Mr Tinkler, for as much as £15m.

Don't pay through roof for online conveyancing

Solicitor warns homebuyers over hidden costs

By TONY PATEY
tony.patey@kosmedia.co.uk

A LEADING Kent law firm has hit-out at cut-price online conveyancers.

MTA Solicitors said some of these services are advertising a low cost 'fixed' fee, which it claims can be linked with hidden extras.

It says many are in breach of the Law Society code of conduct. It has put together a conveyancing charter on its website www.mtasolicitors.com giving top tips to users for choosing the right conveyancer.

A spokeswoman said: "The UK conveyancing industry has a reputation for providing a slow and expensive service. As such, finding a conveyancing solicitor that offers a reliable, efficient and personal service, all at a reasonable cost, is quite a challenge when buying or selling a property."

MTA, which has a branch in Bromley, said the internet has seen a wave of new entrants to this market, with some quoting fixed-fees as low as £99.

Having been enticed by the initial fee, the online application will, it claimed, pile on the extras, such as shared ownership fees, mortgage fees and stamp duty fees. The quote could escalate, it claims, way beyond the initial £99 to anything in excess of £500.

Rule 7 of the Law Society code of conduct makes it clear that solicitors and firms representing them who advertise their services must comply with The British Code of Advertising Practice and more importantly that solicitors must be "clear and up front with fees".

Solicitors and their agents have a duty to express fees clearly and when showing them in advertisements. Failure to do so could result in a breach of rules.

David Green, chief executive officer of MTA, said: "A successful conveyancing department must offer the client a first-class personal service.

"Attempting to provide the service by utilising non-qualified staff with little or no experience and an over-reliance on a case management system will lead to problems.

"When people are making one of the biggest purchases of their life, we believe they are entitled to have one person allocated to their case, to whom they will have direct access."

Switching to a cheaper option may not be a good idea – to dis-instruct a solicitor at a later date when the transaction has started you will become liable for the fees incurred. Making the right inquiries up front will save you money in the long run and should secure you the service you deserve.

The Law Society states that where 'legal fees' or similar expressions are used, the fees quoted should be the fees to be charged by the solicitor. It should not conceal a commission or referral fee to be paid to a third party. Any such commission or referral fee should be shown separately.

Mr Green said: "Customers need to be savvy in this competitive market, and make a decision based on quality of service as well as price. Realistically, fees should be around £500 for an average house in order to secure the services of a top-quality conveyancer.

"Services like this can speed up your transaction, reduce the chance of a deal falling through, and make sure the process is as stress-free as possible. It is important that the consumer knows what to expect, how the service will be delivered and by whom."

New project aimed at plugging skills gap

MOMENTUM gathered this week in Medway in the drive to get business more involved with education programmes in the wake of a visit by John Denham, Secretary of State for Innovation, Universities and Skills, showcasing the area as a shining example of an education-business arena.

His visit came as some serious initiatives, both locally and nationally, were appearing in the wake of efforts to plug vital skills gaps and getting businesses more involved in tertiary (post-secondary) education.

The North Kent Construction Skills Project (NoKCS), set up by a number of local and regional authorities, employment agencies and employers to tackle the skills gaps in the construction industry, is already teaching lecturers and teachers so they can pass on knowledge.

NoKCS, funded through SEEDA and hosted by Economic Development Medway Council, found the modern method of making cassette flooring was not being taught in FE colleges, so set about solving the problem.

It approached Rochester-based Total Floor Systems, which designs and manufactures cassette floorings, and a programme has been put together.

Glenys Gilbert- Collins, project director of NoKCS, said: "This is what I call true employer led training; it offers sustainable skills for a changing and growing sector. This is a first in Kent and we hope there'll be more to come.

"Employers who are able to engage with this kind of innovation and can help deliver the skills that are needed, we want to hear from the. It's terrific that it's happening in Medway, the home of one of the most exciting developments in Europe, Rochester Riverside."

Meantime, a 23-page confidential blueprint – leaked to the Financial Times – aimed at getting employers involved in shaping higher education degrees, is circulating inside Whitehall.

Produced by the Department for Innovation, Universities and Skills, it is expected to be published later this year.

Firm finishes move to shiny new home

SITTINGBOURNE-based Deacon Finishes has moved to two large, purpose-built factories at Fairway Business Park on the Eurolink Estate.

The company, which started in 2001 at a factory on Crown Quay Lane in Whitstable, spray-finishes a huge variety of internal and external joinery, metal and plastic items using acrylic, polyurethane and polyester coatings.

A vacuum coating machine has been installed to coat cladding, decking and moulding parts up to 300mm in width.

This means Deacon can coat timber and cement fibre weatherboarding in large volumes, but still maintain the correct specification.

Free advice forums for freight companies

RESPONSIBILITIES involved in managing lorry drivers continue to become increasingly important and complicated.

Failure to ensure they are carried out correctly could have unwelcome health and safety, insurance, fleet management and vehicle condition impacts.

So Tunbridge Wells-based Freight Transport Association has organised a series of briefing events at locations throughout the UK, free of charge to FTA members. Attendance is limited to two delegates per company.

To book, email memberservices@fta.co.uk or call 08717 11 22 22. Nearest to Kent is on April 8 at Gatwick, starting 2pm.

Pupils aim for young consumers award

COMPETING to be young consumers of 2008 is a team from the Simon Langton Grammar School for Boys, Canterbury.

They won the Kent final for the Young Consumers of the Year Competition and will now compete with other South East finalists at the regional final on March 27 at Kent County Council's Sessions House.

Rental firm deliveries reach safety milestone

HEWDEN, a leading equipment rental provider, has passed a significant health and safety milestone.

The company, which has branches in Dartford, Ashford and Belvedere, said its 2,000-plus workforce has notched up seven million working hours without a motor vehicle accident which has led to a loss in working time.

Tom Corrigan, head of safety and quality services at Hewden, said: "This is a fantastic achievement for Hewden and a big boost, not only for us, but also for our customers."

Alliance promotes top tourism venues at fair

KENT Tourism Alliance (KTA) was promoting the best of the county's attractions at the British Travel Trade Fair, NEC Birmingham this week.

It was the fourth time KTA has exhibited at the fair.

Joining for the first time was The Hop Farm, which boasts the world's most impressive collection of oast houses near Paddock Wood.

Other stand partners were Hever Castle, Canterbury Attractions Group, which includes Canterbury Cathedral and The Canterbury Tales, Medway Council and Dickens World.

Aussies to hold off sale of stake in Bluewater

AUSTRALIAN property company Lend Lease has revealed a sharp increase in first-half profits but was cautious on the prospects of the UK market.

But chief executive Greg Clarke said a mooted sale of its 30 per cent stake in Bluewater would not go ahead.

He said: "We are in the fortunate position of not being a forced seller of assets and, with current markets lacking transactional liquidity, we may decide to defer any such sales in the short term."

The bride and vroom

By TONY PATEY
tony.patey@kosmedia.co.uk

AN ORPINGTON-based wedding car firm which started with just one vehicle has crossed the finishing line as "Best Wedding Car Company in the UK" in a national final held at London's Claridges Hotel.

It's a crowning achievement for family-run firm MechGem Luxury Wedding Cars which has stormed ahead in the brides and grooms market since it began in 2001 – not just in the car hire side but also ancillary services.

The business was established by Doug and Moya Stevens, who have since retired, but their daughter Kay, and her husband Lee Carey, have taken over its steering wheel. From just one car they are now running a fleet of seven classic and vintage vehicles.

Special

Mr Carey said: "We are delighted to have been recognised for such a big achievement in the wedding industry. We have thought for a while that we offer something quite special – not just a wedding car service. I'd really like to thank all our customers who voted for us."

His parents, Maggie and Bill Carey, also help with driving and promotions. The cars are meticulously cared for and looked after, he said, and he managed the transportation for over 200 weddings last year.

WINNERS: (l-r) Doug Stevens, Kay Carey, Maggie Carey, Moya Stevens, Bill Carey and Lee Carey of MechGem Luxury Wedding Cars

He said: "We have tried to change the perception that wedding car companies are run by retirees who are inflexible in their approach to wedding car hire.

"We will always try to help a bride to achieve the day that she dreams of, which means going the extra mile (no pun intended) each time we conduct a wedding and not just once in a while.

"Our drivers carry a special emergency kit, the contents of which will remain anonymous to our competitors, which has in the past solved every wedding day drama imaginable.

"We believe it is our 'wedding planning and crisis management approach' to car hire that has allowed the company to go from strength to strength and to truly make a difference."

Mrs Carey said: "We feel that as a family we have approached wedding car hire differently. We are even conducting weddings further afield now because brides want us, rather than another company, to take them on their big day."

The firm's vehicles include two 1970s Rolls Royce Silver Shadows, two 1960s Silver Clouds, an Austin Princess Vanden Plas Limousine, a 1937 Rolls Royce D Back Limousine, and a 1932 Rolls Royce Open Tourer.

Mrs Carey and mother-in-law Maggie have also started up a wedding planning company, Heading Up the Aisle, which is just about to celebrate its first birthday.

Marsh guide's pride in award

STEVE Humphreys had only been working at the Romney Marsh Visitor Centre for a year when he was nominated for a Pride in Shepway Award and went on to win the title of Attraction Employee of the Year 2007.

"I believe I was entered for an award by a colleague and by visitors who had been to our centre in New Romney," said Mr Humphreys, a retired consultant pathologist and keen wildlife photographer.

"I have a huge interest in the marsh, its history and its wildlife. I enjoy talking to visitors and finding out about their particular areas of interest so I can direct them to the best places on the marsh to match those interests."

He is also happy to explain how the visitor centre, a distinctive eco building with straw bale walls and a living roof heated by solar panels. Judges are currently preparing to sort through the nominations for this year's awards, organised by Kent Tourism.

The awards recognise the people who consistently deliver excellent customer service to visitors and residents in local tourist, leisure and hospitality businesses and organisations.

The deadline for nominations is March 18 so there is still time to put forward the names of Shepway people who, like Mr Humphreys, regularly go to extra lengths to help their customers, clients and guests.

For further information, and to make a nomination, call Kent Tourism on 01622 696 936 or email prideinkent@kent.gov.uk

The winners will be announced at the awards presentation at the Leas Cliff Hall, Folkestone, on April 18.

POINTER: Many businesses still put themselves at risk by not preparing

Is your business ready for a major disaster?

HIGH winds and heavy rain lashed Kent early this week, sometimes interfering with electricity supplies – but only a half of the businesses in the region are geared up to face a major disaster from extreme weather or any other big risk.

By TONY PATEY
tony.patey@kosmedia.co.uk

Businesses face rising levels of pressure to protect themselves, but still put themselves at risk by ignoring the impact of high-profile disasters, says a report published by the Chartered Management Institute (CMI) and Cabinet Office.

Just 46 per cent of organisations in the South East, including Kent, are prepared for disaster, despite the majority (71 per cent) admitting that the issue is business critical

Even when contingency plans exist, most employers fail to share them.

Annual labour turnover rests at 13 per cent, but only one in three new members are staff are told what to do in a disaster.

Important

The survey, now in its ninth year, shows that major differences also exist between organisation types, with plans most apparent in the public sector (62 per cent) and among listed companies (55 per cent), compared to only 40 per cent of private and voluntary organisations.

A CMI spokesman said: "The low level of protection is surprising and suggests organisations in the region are still only paying lip service to contingency planning.

"It comes despite a significant majority of managers in the South East (71 per cent) reporting that business continuity is 'important' or 'very important' to their employer, with 70 per cent claiming responsibility for implementation rests at senior management level.

"Bitter experience is also becoming a solid driver for business continuity planning.

"The survey indicates that 94 per cent of organisations which had invoked their plan in the past 12 months felt that it had been effective in reducing disruption."

Only 29 per cent address the potential loss of people, but 35 per cent experienced disruption as a result of this in the past year.

And, despite 73 per cent suggesting that 'IT downtime' would have a significant impact on costs and revenue, only 39 per cent of organisations focus on loss of technology.

Jo Causon, director of marketing and corporate affairs at the Chartered Management Institute, says: "It doesn't matter whether the turbulent times we face are caused by economic or security concerns; the simple fact is that failing to provide safeguards for business operations does not make sense."

A third of organisations with a plan still do not undertake any form of exercise to test it and a high proportion (78 per cent) of those who do an exercise at least once each year said shortcomings had been revealed, enabling them to make improvements. However, nine per cent admitted that no steps were taken to address the uncovered weaknesses.

Bruce Mann, director of civil contingencies at the Cabinet Office, says: "Too many organisations still do not have effective business continuity arrangements in place. This view is echoed by the findings from Sir Michael Pitt's review of the 2007 floods."

Free conference puts healthcare to the fore

TELEHEALTH technology tops the agenda at a University of Kent conference on Wednesday, March 26.

This free event, which is open to individuals from the health sector and related businesses, will feature four speakers.

The idea allows patients to record data such as blood pressure and so on via a computer at home, send results to their GP or nurse and the GP, in turn, is able to monitor and decide if further advice or treatment is necessary.

Kent County Council has pioneered a pilot scheme to test whether TeleHealth equipment enhances its healthcare services.

The event, at Pilkington Building at Medway campus, Chatham Maritime, has been organised by the Canterbury Enterprise Hub, based at the university, in association with the South East Medical Device Network.

For details contact Heather Hoare at the hub on 01227 824 641 or email h.l.hoare@kent.ac.uk.

Second accreditation a major achievement

SITTINGBOURNE-based legal compliance company Due Diligence Solutions has just been awarded its second recent major accreditation.

Following the ISO Accreditation BS EN ISO 9001: 2000 for quality management, it has now received the OHSAS18001:1999 for occupational health and safety.

Both are internationally recognised and only one or two per cent of companies in the UK have both awards so it is quite an achievement for the company.

It is a rapidly growing business and deals with the likes of Manchester United and Nike.

It also offers excellent prices for local companies such as Gillingham Football Club, covering all aspects of legal compliance such as fire safety, health and safety and food safety.

Started in 2003 by Paul and Sue Smith, it was winner of Swale New Business of the Year Award 2007.

More hiring than firing on jobs front

EMPLOYERS in the South East forecast positive job growth this spring, with hiring intentions significantly above the national average for the next three months, according to Manpower employment firm which has branches in the county.

Its Employment Outlook Survey, a quarterly study of more than 2,100 UK employers hiring intentions for the quarter ahead, reveals an optimistic labour market in the South East.

Eleven per cent of employers plan to take on more staff while only two per cent intend to make headcount reductions.

Across the country, all employers report positive or neutral hiring plans over the next three months, with employers in seven of the 12 regions surveyed anticipating a hiring outlook equal to or above the national average.

Fort flies flag for business

By TONY PATEY
tony.patey@kosmedia.co.uk

UNIQUE location with unparalleled security, including drawbridge and 24/7 CCTV monitoring. A castle? Well, no, it's a fort, and it's in Kent. And it's open for business.

Historic Fort Horsted in Chatham has become a business centre, and as well as business units it can offer training workshops, room hire and venue hire.

It's being flagged up as the county's best-kept secret, and that's probably not far from the truth, and the businesses that have already moved in have apparently become very fond of the location, a renovated Napoleonic fort which is an ancient scheduled monument.

So far 10 single-unit casements have been offered, and every one was taken up. Unit cost was £12 per sq ft, discounted in the first and second years, with three-year lease agreements with opt-out clauses after one year to terminate after 18.

A single unit is 580 sq ft, and carries a very inclusive service charge of £3 a sq ft.

Two-storey new builds are coming up. Work is about to recommence and should be completed within six months. There will be five units; however, at such an early stage an interested client could negotiate bespoke facilities and features.

RESTORATION: Fort Horsted is been transformed into a modern business centre

Basically, the average two-storey unit is 1,242 sq ft, at unit cost £12 per sq ft, discounted in the first and second years. Lease features and service charge is the same as for single-units.

Horsted was one of five forts built in the mid-1800s to defend Chatham's eastern flank and its dockyard where new iron-clad warships were being constructed. Named after the Saxon king Horsa, building began in 1880 using convict labour.

Constructed in the shape of a six-sided arrow head, with each flank protected by machine guns in the counterscarp galleries, the fort would have been home to a garrison of about 400 men and women.

It was sold to a development company for £10,000 in 1963, and then followed a variety of owners and tenants including Kent County Council, Ford UK, the Rootes Group and Fort Tyres.

In 1972 it fought off an attempt to demolish it and build 120 private homes, but in 1976 an enormous fire broke out. At the peak of the blaze 50 firefighters were on site.

It fell into disrepair, but in 1997 it was put up for auction and bought by Avondale Environmental Services. By 2001 it was ready to begin a new chapter in its long life.

For more information call 01634 823 205 or email info@forthorsted.co.uk.

Major plans for harbour regeneration

A MAJOR transformation is taking place on the old Margate Harbour Arm, under plans of two dynamic property developers playing a significant part in the regeneration of the Thanet area.

The Harbour Arm is a prominent feature of the seafront, close to the planned Turner Contemporary Gallery, and the idea – by Graham Knight and Dr Fiona Sherriff – is to create another new attraction in the regenerating seaside town.

So the old fishermens' stores are being transformed into restaurants, artists' studios and retail units, and the site will also be used as an events location.

Mr Knight said: "Significant progress has already been made. The first challenge is to make sure the units are completely structurally sound and watertight."

The units won't be ready until May, but the operators have already received interest from people wanting to run businesses there.

Dr Sherriff said: "We are creating a site for a community of outlets which will complement all the improvements going on the Margate Old Town at the moment."

Internet research is way forward for Local Opinion

MARKET research can be extremely expensive for firms, especially small businesses, but now a new initiative has been launched to give Kent bosses a chance to do proper research at a fraction of the usual cost.

Behind the new idea, called Local Opinion, is Mike Thompson, who is probably best known as the owner and founder of Sample Surveys, which at the time was one of the UK's largest independent market research outfits and which he sold six years ago to Aegis Marketing, one of the world's largest research groups.

After a formal five-year period in which he could not compete in the industry – a usual restriction in the industry – he is now running Kent-based Local Opinion under the umbrella of his company Lake Communications consultancy.

It's an online panel of local residents professionally recruited by trained interviewers and managed on a regular basis. Current figures stand at more than 1,200.

Companies can conduct research throughout the whole of Kent or within the following individual areas: Ashford, Bromley, Canterbury, Dartford, Dover, Folkestone and Hythe, Gravesham, Maidstone, Medway, Sevenoaks, Swale, Thanet, Tonbridge and Malling, and Tunbridge Wells.

Here, Mr Thompson answers KOS Media's questions:

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Former owner and founder Mike Thompson sold his successful market research company Sample Surveys six years ago, and after a formal period during which he could not compete in the market he is now back on the block with a new venture based in Kent called Local Opinion

Q Can you tell us a little about Local Opinion and what inspired you to start another market research firm?

A It has been six years since I sold my previous business, Sample Surveys, and being out of the industry for the five-year non-compete period has given me plenty of time to gain a new perspective. While my new company will use all interviewing techniques, we intend to specialise in internet-based research.

Using the internet as an interviewing medium has been the most notable development in the research industry over the past five years.

When used properly, the internet is the best way of conducting an interview, both for the researcher and the respondent. However, the poor quality of a lot of internet research has given it a bad reputation mainly because of the poor quality of respondent recruitment.

For our Local Opinion internet research we recruit personally, using our own interviewers, which results in a sample of respondents that are recruited throughout the county and are representative of the local population.

We enjoy excellent respondent co-operation because they can see that we include questions that are designed to raise local issues.

A section of our surveys contain a 'free' section dealing with local issues. The results of these sections are published in the local media so residents can see the research helping to ensure that local views are heard on a continuous basis. We also invite respondents and residents to send in questions they feel should be included in future surveys, giving people the opportunity to have their say on their town and the issues that affect them.

These issues can be very wide ranging from local government to transport; perceived lack of public services and suggestions to improve pubs and restaurants.

Q What separates you from other market research firms?

A We provide top quality research at a good price by using the latest technology allied to quality standards. We value the people who complete our surveys and ensure they can see a clear return by providing the local residents and government with accurate information to help build better communities.

Obviously we are running this as a business and organisations pay for complete surveys or to include their own questions in our regular surveys. Extensive use of the internet in the research process is designed to allow companies of all sizes to get involved.

Clients can have as little or as much involvement in a survey as they wish; they can include just one question or have an entire survey tailored to their needs.

Also they can get involved in syndicated surveys in their particular business areas which will include research studies looking at shopping, transport, car purchase, home improvements, leisure centres, garden centres, local visitor attractions, restaurants and nightlife.

Q What's next for Local Opinion?

A We will be launching a business version of Local Opinion which will involve the internet interviewing of representative samples of all types of businesses operating in Kent.

HCW grows into larger premises

TO meet growing business and better meet the needs of clients, accountant Horwath Clark Whitehill (HCW) has moved to larger offices in Tunbridge Wells.

HCW employs more than 500 staff operating from a national network of offices including premises at Maidstone and Tunbridge Wells. The Tunbridge Wells office is now based in larger premises at Jaeger House in Clanricarde Gardens.

Partner Mark Anderson said: "Although there is doom and gloom in some quarters, we are confident the South East will continue to be the engine room of the British economy and we are keen to continue to play a major part in the vibrant local scene."

The firm has recently recruited a fourth corporate finance partner and there are further plans for recruitment over the coming months.

Services sector is feeling the strain

By TONY PATEY
tony.patey@kosmedia.co.uk

CONSUMERS tightening their purse strings because of the credit crunch have led to owners of services to such as hotels, bars, restaurants, cinemas and gyms, being their most gloomy for more than six years.

The mood among service-providers in the South East including Kent has darkened considerably compared with three months ago after disappointing sales, according to the latest Grant Thornton/CBI Services Sector Survey.

Slowdown

With levels of business volumes and values rated well below normal in the services sector as a whole, sentiment fell sharply on last quarter.

Malcolm Hyde, CBI South East regional director, said: "The services sector is beginning to feel the slowdown underway in other parts of the economy and firms are concerned about the outlook for their business over the coming year.

"This is focused mainly on the parts of the sector affected by tighter household purse strings – namely consumer services – as people feel less inclined to treat themselves to meals out, hotel stays or trips to the cinema.

"While demand has held up for most business services firms, some in management and legal services have been hit by slower mergers and acquisitions activity. Business services firms are doing what they can to insulate themselves from the slowdown, by focusing on increasing efficiency and seeking to reach new customers with new services.

"Consumer services firms did not manage to put up selling prices as much as expected though they still hope to do so next quarter. Price inflation is not evident in the business services sector, however."

Firms providing services to consumers, such as hotels, bars, restaurants, cinemas and gyms, were particularly pessimistic about the general business situation, with the steepest fall in optimism since November 2001.

Those offering business and professional services, such as lawyers, accountants, architects, IT and recruitment firms, were also less optimistic than they were three months ago, after five quarters of improving sentiment.

Negative perceptions about the 12 months ahead have already deteriorated for consumer services firms, which no longer expect growth in the coming year to exceed the last. Likewise, business and professional firms also do not expect their business to expand more in the next 12 months than the last.

Budget no relief for bond holders

By LIZ RULE
Pharon Independent Financial Advisers Ltd

THE BUDGET was a non event for many people as the Chancellor had little scope for anything other than tinkering with green issues, putting more tax on alcohol and admitting the UK economy is a little "overstretched".

The budget did, however, confirm some Capital Gains Tax (CGT) changes, taking effect next month, that could have a serious impact on the UK life and savings industry.

Many people investing hold their investments in either a bond or a mutual fund and the taxation basis for mutual funds is changing, making the decision about which type to hold possibly different.

Until now, profits on a mutual fund (above the personal CGT allowance) for a higher rate tax payer would be taxed at 40 per cent, as CGT rates reflect the investors marginal income tax position. Now they will be taxed at 18 per cent flat.

Bonds, however, are taxed internally at a rate of 20 per cent and for a higher rate taxpayer there is another 20 per cent to pay on profits on encashment, with no CGT personal allowance, making a total effective rate of 40 per cent.

Bond providers argue that the internal rate of taxation is never as high as 20 per cent as they can write off costs against profits and offset losses.

However, HMRC gives you a notional 20 per cent paid on your tax return for the gains on bonds, and they would not do that if they could get away with a much lower rate.

There may not previously have been a clear indicator on whether an investor should invest within a bond or a mutual fund, but the decision is now likely to be more pointed and bond providers are not happy.

My advice is, if you have investments, be it in bonds or mutual funds, now would be a good time to consider the suitability of what you hold and see if moving forward it continues to be in your best interests.

KENT Farmers' Market Association will be formally launched on April 3.

The association represents the 30 markets in the county, which hold nearly 900 markets a year between them.

It has been set up through the initiative of their managers, most of whom are volunteers.

Make another good business decision. Get a Vito.

You won't find a harder worker than a Mercedes-Benz Vito. You will find some superb benefits such as service intervals of at least 18,000 miles, a powerful CDI engine and a range of body lengths, roof heights and vehicle weights.

TOUGH COMPETITION: Herne Bay United want more sponsorship to help them compete on the European stage

Bay rollers' Euro hardship

BRITAIN'S number-one roller hockey side could struggle to compete in the European League next season due to a lack of sponsorship.

Herne Bay United have won 13 of the last 15 national titles and a number of their players make up the England national side.

Despite their domestic dominance, the team have struggled in the European League competition this season, losing their five games before last night's clash with Prato.

Double-figure defeats against professional sides from Portugal and Spain have been hard to take, but United have their sights set on winning the English league in order to return to the sport's elite competition next season,

However, the club needs to raise £12,000 just to compete. This year was the first time the players' fares were paid thanks to sponsors.

Player/coach Phil McVey said: "Every year it gets more expensive. It's difficult, but ideally what we would love is to have enough sponsorship to pay for our training expenses."

McVey now wants to make sure the club build on this season and he believes regular participation would reduce the gap between United's amateurs and the professional European sides, who are among the best club sides in the world.

He said: "It's frustrating because is if we played against that standard every week, we would improve.

"If we could play in Europe every season, then within three or four years we would expect to be able go toe-to-toe with these teams."

Despite owning the worst record in the 16-team tournament, McVey insists the players have enjoyed the experience and believes their exploits have helped raise the club's profile.

He said: "It has been good, everyone has thoroughly enjoyed it. It has put roller hockey firmly on the map in this country and Herne Bay."

Georgina back from the brink

Modern pentathlete aims for Olympics after beating career-threatening illness

By DAVID PRITCHARD

EIGHT months on from being diagnosed with an illness which threatened to rob her career and significantly restrict her life, Georgina Harland is poised to return as she prepares for one last chance at Olympic qualification.

The Olympic bronze medallist will compete in the modern pentathlon World Cup event at Millfield School in Somerset on March 30.

It marks an extraordinary return to fitness for the 29-year-old from Canterbury, who was unable to train for three months last season after contracting post-viral fatigue. The illness, which begins with severe flu-like symptoms, drains energy levels and can last indefinitely – a disaster for a professional athlete.

Harland said: "In July it came to a head when I was swimming 10 seconds slower over 200 metres than my personal best.

"I had been having the odd bad training session and then they became more frequent, but the worse I was doing in training the more I wanted to train because I thought I was unfit. It spirals and as an athlete the hardest thing is for someone to tell you to slow down and stop."

Frustrating

Doctors signed Harland off sport and she spent a frustrating period of enforced rest.

Against medical advice she competed in the World Championships in Berlin, where a top-three finish would have guaranteed a place in Beijing. Considering her lack of training, her eighth place was commendable, but it was not enough to ensure her place at the Olympics.

In September, without any training for two months, she came 13th in the World Cup final in Beijing, again missing out on securing an Olympic berth.

With no sign of an end to the demoralising condition, Harland reached a nadir in the autumn.

She said: "Getting out of bed was a drag – I felt like had been hit by a bus. I was thinking, 'ultimately, this is my health, it's more than my career'."

From that low point the former world number one has worked her way back to fitness

BETTER: Georgina Harland is back on track after overcoming post-viral fatigue

one training session at a time. Four months on, she is in the longest injury-free period of her career since Athens and is totally focused on reaching the start line in Beijing.

Britain only has two Olympic places for the women's pentathlon, with Heather Fell and Katy Livingstone already reaching the required standard.

It leaves Harland with just one opportunity to qualify. She must finish ahead of the British pair and win a medal at the World Championships in Hungary in May.

She said: "The pressure is there and I know there is a possibility that something could go wrong. But ultimately I am just focusing on doing my best. I know I will give it everything. Training is going great and I'm just trying to stay injury free.

"I'm getting back into great shape. We have European and World Championships but in our sport it is all about the Olympics."

To step up her preparations for Budapest, Harland is competing in the British leg of the World Cup at Millfield School on March 30. It will be an important yardstick of her form before the make or break outing at the World Championships.

Circuit to corner new drivers

KENT'S Buckmore Park is opening a 120-metre long Paddock Circuit for budding Formula One racers.

The Go-Kart track in Chatham will open its new circuit for on Friday, March 21 for the first time and will be available for most school holidays and summer weekends.

The Arrive 'n' Drive scheme will give youngsters aged eight to 16 an opportunity to race on the circuit where McLaren superstar Lewis Hamilton first learnt to drive before being discovered in 1996.

Also new are Italian manufactured Formula One style electric karts for the under sevens.

On Easter Sunday, Buckmore Park is organizing a 'Have a Go' family karting day for all ages between 10am and 5pm.

The track is also opening its new Bambino Kart Racing School and Junior Club for six and seven-year-olds this month.

Kent says, 'Welcome back Yasir'

SUMMER SON: Yasir Arafat played a big part in Kent's Twenty20 win Picture: ADY KERRY

PAKISTAN all-rounder Yasir Arafat has been cleared to re-sign for Kent this summer.

Kent were sweating on the outcome as to whether Arafat would receive clearance from the Pakistan Cricket Board, but the county received notification on Friday and confirmed he would be rejoining the club.

The 26-year-old played a big part in Kent's road to Edgbaston in the Twenty20 Cup last season and was at the crease when Darren Stevens hit the winning runs.

Arafat scored 369 runs with a highest score of 122, and took 27 wickets with a best of 5-63 last season.

Kent's director of cricket, Graham Ford, was delighted to have obtained the services of the talented former Sussex all-rounder.

He said: "We are delighted that Yasir is coming back to play for us again. He made an immense contribution to the playing squad last year and I know he is keen to repeat his performance for the club again this year."

Speaking from Pakistan, Arafat said: "It is great news that I have received clearance from the Pakistan Cricket Board to play again for Kent. I really enjoyed my time at the club last year and am excited about our prospects for 2008."

Kent have confirmed that Arafat will be available for the entire season unless he is selected for international duty.

Constant

Meanwhile, Kent also announced last week that former club president George Kennedy is to succeed Carl Openshaw as the county's new chairman.

Kennedy, 67, was unanimously elected at the club's Annual General Meeting on Monday night and will serve as chairman for the next three years.

Openshaw said: "I am delighted that George Kennedy has been elected to succeed me as chairman of Kent County Cricket Club. He has been a strong and constant supporter of the club for many years and, with his wide business experience, and love of cricket, I am confident the leadership of the club is in very good hands."

Kennedy was a member of a steering group that was set up to supervise a plan for the redevelopment of the St Lawrence Ground in Canterbury.

He said: "In succeeding Carl, I hope to carry on the excellent work he started concerning the ground development at Canterbury.

"My main priority, of course, will be to assist in establishing the continuing improvement in Kent cricket and to do all I can to support the staff and players here at the club."

• Kent and England women's captain Charlotte Edwards is set to turn professional after the England and Wales Cricket Board made available 10 coaching contracts.

The successful England side, which retained the Ashes after winning a one-off Test in February, were invited to apply for full or part-time contracts, which will enable them to train and perform at the highest level.

At present, up to 20 of the England side, which would includes Kent's other star Lydia Greenway, have received funding from Sport England, although it is believed that covers little more than the players' expenses.

Now, Edwards and the other nine players would be contracted to the ECB and would work as ambassadors for the Chance to Shine scheme, which is designed to encourage more girls into the sport.

Crofts set to miss vital Gills games due to Wales duty

GILLINGHAM captain Andrew Crofts could miss a crucial game in the club's battle against relegation if he is selected to play for his country later this month.

Wales boss John Toshack will tomorrow announce his squad for the friendly against Luxembourg on March 26. Crofts has been included in the squad for the last 10 games and is expected to be among the party.

The 23-year-old is a key player in the Gills' fight against the drop, scoring three goals in recent weeks.

A call-up would cause him to miss the club's vital away trip to Port Vale on Easter Monday and mean he would not return until the day before a home game against Carlisle.

Gills boss Mark Stimson acknowledged it was a concern, but hoped to hold talks with the Football Association of Wales if Crofts was picked.

He told Kent on Sunday: "We can't have total control over the situation, but I'm sure if we needed him for our cause – which is bigger than Wales' – then I think people could get together and have a chat and come up with a sensible answer."

Premier League sides regularly prevent their players from joining up with international squads for friendly matches if they are needed for more important club games.

Gillingham-born Crofts qualifies to play for Wales through a grandparent. He won international honours with the under-19 and under-21 sides and has 10 caps for the senior side.

Elsewhere, Bury have extended Efe Sodje's loan spell away from Priestfield for a second month.

The former Nigerian international has been an ever-present for the League Two side since moving last month.

He has not played for Gills since fracturing an eye socket at Yeovil in November.

League rules state once a player has been on loan for more than a month the club which holds their registration can call them back with 24 hours notice.

Midfielder Stuart Thurgood has also left Priestfield on loan, joining former club Grays Athletic for a month.

England call-up caps great season for Luke

TEENAGER Luke Freeman will take another step in his remarkable rise to fame this week as he joins up with the England under-16 team for a tournament in France.

Six months ago the 15-year-old was in the youth ranks at Gillingham, but rose to prominence in November by becoming the club's youngest ever player with an appearance in the first team.

He was courted by several Premier League clubs and in January sealed a dream switch to Arsenal.

Freeman was included in Kenny Swain's 18-strong England squad for the Montaigu tournament, which begins on Wednesday with a game against Japan.

They will also take on Germany before playing the USA on Saturday, which coincides with Freeman's 16th birthday.

Mark Patterson, manager of Gillingham's Centre of Excellence, coached Freeman and said everyone at the club was delighted with the call-up.

He said: "To get into the England squad is a great achievement and caps a great year for him. All the other lads are pleased for him. It's nice for the club to have one go through and get international honours."

If Freeman can stay in the squad for home games later this year, Patterson intends to take the youth teams to watch their former team-mate play.

Staff makes GB team for the World Championships

ON TRACK: Jamie Staff

OLYMPIC track cyclist hopeful Jamie Staff has been selected to represent Great Britain at the World Track Cycling Championships in Manchester next week.

Staff had been eagerly awaiting the announcement of the sprint team to compete in the event after all the riders were given a trial last week.

The Ashford-born rider joins Chris Hoy, Jason Kenny, Matt Crompton and Ross Edgar in the squad that will compete at the Manchester Velodrome.

The 35-year-old has good memories of the World Championships after picking up a gold medal in the team sprint in 2002 and 2005. He also became the Keirin World Champion in 2004.

Staff said: "I am really excited and it will definitely be an advantage to have the home crowd cheering the British riders on.

"Once you get going around the track there is nothing better than hearing the roar of the crowd getting behind you."

The Great Britain team have still not announced the trio who will be racing at the Beijing Olympics this summer.

Staff admits this year will be his last chance to finally complete his medal collection with an Olympic triumph.

He added: "A good run at the World Championships would definitely put me in good stead ahead of this very important Olympic year. It really is a chance to show the selectors what you can do."

The World Track Cycling Championships begin on March 26.

REBEL PAIR TO BE COURT OUT?

County braced for legal battle over Kemp and Mahmood

By GLENN PEARSON

KENT could be forced to take the England and Wales Cricket Board to court if they are not successful in registering new signings Azhar Mahmood and Justin Kemp.

Both players have been competing in the rebel Indian Cricket League (ICL), but the ECB has said it will ban those involved from featuring in county cricket.

After Kent on Sunday exclusively lifted the lid on doubts Justin Kemp and Azhar Mahmood would be able to feature for the club this season, the ECB announced steps this week to deal with what it terms as 'unauthorised events'.

As the ICL is not sanctioned by the sport's governing body – the International Cricket Council – the ECB will no longer accept registrations for players that have taken part in an unauthorised event in the 12 months leading up to April 1.

Both Kemp and Mahmood fall into this category as they are currently involved in the ICL.

However, Kent maintain they signed both players before the new regulations were released this week and admit they would take court action if neither player were registered for this season.

Kent chief executive Paul Millman told Kent on Sunday: "We have applications in and they are now with the ECB at Lord's. I do not know when we will hear if we are successful, but I do not expect it to be very long.

"I think we hope that pragmatism would prevail and I am a great believer in not having to change tactics because of course it would not be fair on the players.

"We do not have a Plan B and my position on this has been consistent. We signed contracts with the two players in good faith before these conditions blew up so we hope pragmatism will prevail and it won't end up in the courts.

"We respect all the issues and fully support where the ECB are at and the dangers associated with unauthorised events, but when we signed Justin and Azhar none of these regulations were expected.

"I have had lots of dialogue with the Professional Cricketers' Association and the ECB and that is why I have faith that pragmatism will prevail."

The ECB's head of communications, Colin Gibson, exclusively told KoS that the sport's authorities were coming down hard on events not sanctioned by the International Cricket Council and it is now up to Kent how they wish to proceed.

The former Football Association's media chief said: "The ECB are being quite determined about unauthorised cricket and the reasons for that are we are unsure of measures put in for things like anti-doping and anti-corruption as they may not be up to scratch; there is no development of grass roots cricket and it undermines the board of the International Cricket Council.

"The ball is firmly in Kent and the players' court. We are not going to be dealing with this issue en masse because every case is different.

"The ECB is not getting involved in these individual cases and we couldn't comment on individuals because it would be wrong and I do not know the details of each case."

The PCA have now waded into what is a mess that is threatening to blight the start of the English cricket season.

The cricket union is to begin pre-season meetings with all the county squads and is expected to make a comment next month on its findings.

A statement read: "Several cricketers, including a number who are currently playing in ICL and have connections to English counties, have expressed serious reservations about the changes themselves, the rationale for them and the ultimate consequences for players and have asked for the PCA's help and advice."

Their findings could put pressure on the ECB to allow players to play this season otherwise Kent and a number of other counties may be forced into taking court action.
